In Behalf of Boys.

The following from the Emporia, (Kansas) Gazette while written strictly to apply to that town must have been meant to apply to Red Cloud as well:

"Because the graduating classes of the schools and colleges contain a dozen girls to three or four boys, it is the time honored custom to editorially jaw the boys of the land for not staying in school. Boys are used to jawing. They get it at home. They get it at work; they get it when they try to rest, and they do not mind it much. Still it is wearing on the nerves. And because the Gazette is the friend of the boys, this paper desires to give the girls of this town a jawing that the boys have stood patiently for a generation.

A great deal of jawing is done because the boys come down town of a night and loaf around on Commercial street. Perhaps the boys would be better off at home reading good books or thinking high ennobling thoughts, but the Gazette desires to say right here that the boys are in a lot better business down on Commercial street than their sisters who are rigged out in fluffy dresses, perched on the front porch looking for fellows or out on the streets at all hours of the night tagging after them. Too many girls in this man's town are given over body and soul to the fellow business; and their brothers who smoke an occasional cigar, or drink a glass of beer once in a while will be worth more than these morbid, hand-holding, rattle-pated fellow-chasers. And they are becoming too numerous. Put two average Emporia girls in a room together and you can hear the word "he," "he," "he," bubble, through their conversation for hours at a time. If some smart man would come along and put up a temple with nothing but a pair of trousers on the altar, it would seem that these girls would pack the house day and night with their devoted. Fathers complain about their boy-struck girls, but mothers encourage it. They go away and leave their daughters on dark front steps with peached faced kids who couldn't support a motion to adjourn, and when it gets mighty quiet down there, the father upstairs in bed grows and wants to go down and break it up. He knows what's going on. But the mother fears to embarrass the girl and lets the folly proceed. The Gazette contends that the boys down on Commercial street who haven't passed out of the eighth grade in school, who are loafing after a hard day's work, are deserving of more praise and will bring much more honor to the family than the silly girls who go to school and learn just enough to hate dish water, and then come home and spend their evenings mooning and hand-holding with any dirty-faced boy that comes along.

The Gazette would advise parents to quit jawing their boys and turn their attention to the girls. Society is so arranged that a fool boy can see his folly and repent of it, but a fool girl has no chance. She needs advice badly. The world beats sense into a boy. By the time the world has beaten sense into a girl, she is settled for life and can't mend matters and use her sense. Between the ages of thirteen and twenty-two a girl needs sound, plain talk fearfully bad, and she generally doesn't get it, because her mother thinks she is an angel. She isn't an angel and there are more temptations to a girl at home in the parlor and on the front stoop than the boy finds down town. There are hundreds of girls in this town—girls who work hard keep their hearts and minds clean, and who preserve ideals that will bring happiness and hold it through adversity and trials. But these girls have sensible mothers, who know that the girl is made of the same kind of flesh and blood that the boys are made of. But too many girls are growing up like weeds, and the wonder is that there is not more trouble with them than there is. For when a girl gets boy-struck she is a bigger fool than a boy with an inherited taste for whiskey. Men who know something about their own follies are wise enough to know that other things besides whiskey are hereditary. The men growl but it does no good. With the advent of summer, the hand-holding tournaments begin. Why doesn't someone jaw the girls? Why doesn't some of the row at the breakfast table that the boy gets for coming in after curfew, fall on the head of his big sister, who moons around on the front porch until nearly midnight with her fellow? Let up on the boys. If they work all day they should be allowed a little liberty; but when a girl shirks the cooking and slights the dishes and slouches around the house in a wrapper all day, and tugs up at night and lays in wait for a fellow like a huntress for her prey, she is every bit as bad hearted as a whiskey-fiend; and if she calls her ailment love she should be told frankly that her diagnosis is wrong. Love doesn't act that way. Love makes its victims work; it inspires to achievement. It is the motor that moves the world. But moonshine destroys the soul, and the best antidote is a good spanking. Too many mothers quit spanking their daughters five years too early. The Gazette believes that every girl should be spanked in the old-fashioned bare-handed fashion until she can and does make her own clothes, cook the family meals and take care of her own room. If she doesn't learn until she is twenty—she is a child and needs the red finger marks just as badly as a youngster of eight.

When the children's best clothes come from the wash with the colors faded and streaked, and with worn spots showing in places where there should be no wear, then you may know that your laundress is using something besides Ivory Soap.

You can save trouble and expense by furnishing her with Ivory Soap, and insisting that she use it and nothing else. The price of one ruined garment will buy Ivory Soap sufficient for months.

Q. E. D. It is all right to laugh at the Gazette if you want to, but when you want something hushed up for the sake of the girl's parents—remember what you have just read.

Filipino Here August 1st.

Representatives of the Greater American Exposition met the Filipino Village at San Francisco. They came east in twelve elegant coaches with decorations, advertising the big exposition. The entire Filipino Village will be ready for the public August 1. The Hawaiians and Cubans are already here. The Greater America Exposition has redeemed its pledges to show the people, animals, birds and homes of our new possessions. The buildings are all full. The grounds are magnificent. You can now see the finest exposition ever opened west of Chicago. Paine's fireworks are magnificent. Dan Godfrey's band is splendid. Come early.

What might have been—if that little cough hadn't been neglected—is the sad reflection of thousand of consumptives. One minute Cough Cure cures coughs and colds. C. L. Cotting.
