The Five Senses

The hearing ear ministers largely to the mental nature. Its chief charm is that it waits upon the soul with "a sweet concord of sounds."

The sense of smell stands a step lower, divided about equally in ministering to the physical and aesthetic, in man.

The sense of feeling is still lower. The nerves of sensation are its fingers; through them is fulfilled its function of handling and fashioning the mere materials of civilization.

Taste is the humblest among the senses. Its ministrations are devoted, primarily, to the body. The fireman that feeds the engine of the physical system.

Vision is the noblest of our senses. It presides over the activities of the lower faculties, and transcends them in the reach of its power.

Yet the most important of all senses is most abused. The teeth, the nose, the ears, all receive due attention upon the slightest note of warning; while shooting pains and dull aches in and around the eyes—nature's warnings—are allowed to go unheeded, when perhaps perfectly fitted glasses would relieve present trouble and save further regret.
