NEW YORK, Dec. 30. A fire occurred at 7 o'clock yesterday evening in the shoe store of Mendall Jacobs, 66 Baxter street, involving a loss of $5,500 on the stock and building. Partly insured. To-day, by the direction of Coroner Herman, a large force of laborers were set to work to remove the ruins of the late fire on Centre street, and to discover the bodies of the victims burned. After three hours work one man found the burned and mutilated Kearney Junction, body of a girl, who was recognized by a ring on her finger, and proved to be the body of Jane Stuart, a girl employed in the building. Up to 6 o'clock last evening no more bodies were discovered. The policemen have formed lines in front of the building, and all traffic has been stopped in that direction. An immense crowd of spectators gathered to-day to watch the operations of the workmen.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 30. The river froze about three inches Friday night, but the ice is somewhat thinning out; it is still very heavy. The steamer A. J. White, fearing the breaking of another gorge, got up steam and pushed her way through the ice, and landed safely below. —Deacon Wm. E. Hill, also Grand

A bright idea struck him, he determined at once As this was the store run by J. W. Bance, as that the tug boat Webster was sunk. The steamer J. C. Baker, a produce boat, with nineteen hundred bushels of potatoes from Malinda, Ill., was also sunk. The river rose three and a half feet in twenty-four hours, and four feet, seven inches in all. CINCINNATI, Dec. 29. The tug-boats have broken up the ice between Newport and Covington bridge, leaving the river free of ice the length of the harbor. Below the Ohio and Covington bridge the ice was solid, and was crowded with skaters. If the gorge here should break away first, or as soon as the gorge above, all will be well. This, however, is hardly probable as the gorges below are much heavier than those above. One gorge was reported to be sixteen miles in length, and piled up six or eight feet high. The steamboat men are very anxious as to the result, and their hope is that it will not rain.
