> Synopsis of Her Sermon Sunday Morning on the Paraable of the Sower.

Immense Attendance at the Evening Service.

A large crowd gathered Sunday morning beneath the tent that has been spread just north of the First Methodist Church, corner of Capital avenue and Seventeenth street, to hear the celebrated Mrs. Maggie Van Cott, the eloquent lady revivalist, who, during last winter, awakened a new interest in religion in Omaha, and converted a large number from the extensive ranks of the sinners. It will be remembered that her meetings during her first appearance, were so largely attended, that many were turned away almost every evening, so we predict it will be on this, the occasion of her second advent. The audience that assembled vesterday morning, were able mostly to find seats within the | Sunday school children was held at tent, while a long row of seats to the tent. At her suggestion the collection was taken, while everybody joined in singing, "Now I can read my title clear," in which she led off, and induced the others to follow, by exclaiming, "Let everybody sing."

It was noticed by Mrs. Van Cott that the persons sitting on the outside row of seats had been slighted in the matter of the collection, and she remarked that they should not be forgotten next time. This hint, like some of the seed sown by the wayside, fell into good ground, for a young man immediately passed around his own hat and handed which has never before been known over the amount of the collection. in the history of this wicked city.

Mrs. Van Cott took for subject of her sermon the parable of the sower. She had come back to Omaha to sow the seed of the Holy Ghost, and she hoped that it might fall into some hearts and bring forth, some thirty, some fifty, and some an hundred fold. On her way to this city she had noticed the sower by the wayside put in the seed with great toil and patience. He went across the field again and again. The sowing was not always accomplished in a day or a week. Had she gone to him and said, "I see no fruit," he would have replied, "I sow in hope, and shall reap in joy." Again, by faith, she beheld him gathering the rich grain when the harvest came. She came to-day as a tiller of the spiritual soil of Omaha. She wanted no word uttered that would be lost. She spoke to some, to whom she had spoken before. She came to sow the seed of God's infinite glory; she spoke words of truth, which she hoped would fall into some hearts, like the seed by the wayside. She divided her hearers into several classes. Some were entirely given to sin and worldliness; others there were, who, after hearing their pastor, or herself, said: "It did us so much good, we will be better." There was another class who received the word, and who would be found

Mrs. Van Cottasked him. "I have no feeling," was the re- dueed prices at
