THE LANTERNE AND THE BONAPARTISTS.

Reporter—You were first exiled by Louis Napoleon. How did you come out of that?

Rochefort—That paper had a circulation of over 150,000, and my satirical editorials were a terror to the little nephew of his great uncle. I was tried and condemned to six years imprisonment at hard labor, but I managed to leave France before they could arrest me. They confiscated my paper, which had cost me over $100,000, and was worth half a million.

Reporter—I presume you don't consider the Bonapartists formidable now?

Rochefort—The Bonapartists control the French police and a small portion of the army, but the police is by no means the country. Their chances are indeed very slim.

Reporter—What were you convicted for, and how came you to remain in Paris after the fall of the Commune?

Rochefort—The only crime I have ever been guilty of, was committed with the pen. I have shed much ink, but never a drop of blood. Even during the terrible struggle of the Commune in Paris, I never did anything more criminal than using my pen in advocating what I considered the true principles of republicanism. Why they should charge me with crimes among men who actually committed murder, arson, theft, and other crimes, I cannot comprehend.

Reporter—Have you any apprehensions that they will seek to arrest you under the extradition treaty?

Rochefort—I don't believe they would try it either with the United States, or Switzerland, or Belgium. I should prefer not to risk Belgium; the clerical party is too strong there, and the government might succumb to pressure.

ROCHEFORT'S FUTURE COURSE.

Reporter—Your trip around the world would be a romantic story—more so stirring even than that of Victor Hugo's best romances?

Rochefort—Yes; and it is my intention to collect these incidents in a book which I propose to publish when I return to Europe.

Reporter—What is your plan of future operations, and where do you propose to locate your headquarters?

Rochefort—I am going to New York, where I expect to hold a consultation with some friends; I expect to remain in New York about a week, and will then sail for England. My sojourn in England will depend on circumstances; but my intention is to retire to Geneva, where I can take care of the education of my children and write my book. I due time a change will take place in France and I may be able to turn about a degree of amnesty. In that event, I shall, of course, resume my connection with the press.

Reporter—Do you intend to stop over at Chicago on your way to New York?

Rochefort—I don't believe I can afford to stop. It would disarrange my programme. The only place in America I want to see is Niagara Falls.

Reporter—Rebuilt Chicago is as much of a world's wonder as Niagara, and I should think you would be glad to avail yourself of the opportunity to see that great city.

Rochefort—I am a child of Nature, and I love to gaze upon nature's wonders above all other things. Chicago is undoubtedly a most interesting city, but I can see nothing about big houses and palatial structures.

Reporter—Your frankness has placed me under obligations. Before parting I should be pleased to receive your autograph card.

Rochefort—Certainly, with great pleasure, (taking one of our cards) we will follow with his crayon: Souvenir de mon voyage a travers l'Amerique.

HENRI ROCHEFORT.

Translated: (A memorial of my journey across America.) And thus closed our memorable interview with the famous French journalist.

PERSONALITIES.

Lewis D. Campbell is announced to take the field against the new Ohio Constitution.

Senator Brownlow has been requested to write a letter to be read at the decoration of the graves in the National Cemetery, in Knoxville on the 30th inst.

"Boss McCormick" is the leader of the Illinois Bourbon, and he has called for the execution of the "Musty Squad," according to the Chicago Times.

Marshal Serrano has declared himself willing to support a conservative republic. He will support anything that promises him emolument and arbitrary power.

"Tell me, ye winged winds, that round my pathway play, is no place left to me when I can steal away?" is said to be Brooks' Arkansas refrain just now.

Mrs. Dio Lewis, and other temperance women, of Dr. Pentecost's church, Boston, were most astonished by the statement of a liquor dealer that I would go to Belgium, and that most of his customers belong to the very church which they represented. The female crusaders of the Hub have met with no success in their visitations.

The Paris correspondent of the Nation writes: "Victor Hugo is very rich, Lamartine gained enormous sums of money, so did Alexandre Dumas. The theatre is, however, as a rule, the only lucrative province of literature. While such men as Sardon, Mehaec and Haley are making large fortunes, Talme, who is a very hard worker, and who lives in the closest economy, has only succeeded in making what must be called a very small fortune. About it, not rich, as he only writes novels, and all his attempts on the stage have been failures. So were the attempts of Theophile Gautier, with the exception of the libretto of a ballet.

Somebody having asked Treasurer Spinner if it is true that he swears louder than any one in Washington, that gentleman responds in a long letter explaining the instance which he supposed gave rise to the story. It was after the late States previous to the war. General Spinner says he refused to pay it, and that the refusal led to an animated controversy, in which some pretty energetic language was used. When he got through, a Presbyterian gentleman who stood by expressed his approval, and an elderly lady of the Methodist persuasion clasped her hands and said: "Oh, Mr. Spinner, you know how in my heart I labor wearing, but I declare for it that your swearing saved me for all the world like good payers."
