A Letter from Judge Wilbur. POLICE COURT, June 2, 1874.

EDITOR OMAHA BEE: Your article of yesterday, in regard to what you are pleased to style the "Rotten System" under which prostitution pays tribute to city, contains a few errors. (doubtless unintentional) which seem to demand correction. The number of prostitutes who paid fines for last month was forty-nine, instead of seventy-five, as you estimate it. You say, "each inmate of public houses is compelled to pay $7,90 to the Police Court." Such is not the fact. Only seventeen paid the Constable fee for last month, instead of seventy-five, as you indirectly state.

Whether the Marshal should, should not, employ a deputy, is none of my business, and 1 do not propose to discuss it. It is quite clear to me that he cannot himself do all that is required of him in the

In justice to him it should be stated that he made complaint on the first of the month as required, against all the inmates, who were known as such. In many cases they are brought before the court, and cannot pay their fines, and in the exercise of that elemency which is my prerogative I give them further time. Sometimes it is necessary to re-arrest them, and that has frequently been done by a constable, and is attended with additional Prostitution is an evil, which, like the sale of intoxicating drinks, cannot, in cities, be entirely suppressed. I am not prepared to say but that the system adopted in Omaha is as good as any. It is attended with considerable trouble, especially against the refractory.

I hardly think it necessary for me to state that no "rapacious hawks" or "spies" are tolerated right under the nose of the Police Judge, to my knowledge. I have no control of the Marshal or police, and it is not my purpose to vindicate the defense of either, except in so far as a statement of facts may tend to exenorate them from the serious charges you make against their official action. Philharmonic Society.

By our Musical Critic 1 The programme of the third and last concert is before us, and whilst we could have wished to have seen, in accordance with our expressed views upon the occasion of the second concert, more vocalization and less instrumentation; still we are satisfied that the management has done the best possible with its present available material, and are inclined to believe that the third and last concert of the season, which takes place on Thursday evening next, will be the best of the series. It is the province of every honorable, high-toned journal, to give to its readers a fair review of all entertainments which appeal to the publie for its support and judgment; and we claim in our notices thus far the Philharmonic Concerts, to have performed our duty "without fear or favor," and in such a manner as to elicit the unqualified commendation of a majority of the cultivated portion of this community. Neither shall we, in the future, be deterred from discharging that pleasant function by the snappish remarks of any obscure, wandering minstrel, whose sole complaint is that his little "toot" cannot be heard in any other manner than through the public prints.

All criticism is beneficial only so far as it is just. This rule applies with peculiar force to home talent. Criticism with severe strictures upon a body of home singers has generally been considered as out of place. But because they are "above critieism" it does not necessarily follow that they are beyond the reach of a kindly hint, prompted by the most unselfish motives. If, therefore, the recommendations of a number of musical people who are good judges of the production of classic music, cannot be tolerated, we shall most asredly drift into that terrible social bore, a society that is so touchy that it

The unanimous verdict of many ompetent judges fixed the fact that the second Philharmonic concert was, so far as regarded the instrumental portion, too long; and we are glad to learn that its managers have wisely accepted that decision and have curtailed the proportions of that feature in their next question of practice amongst its members in their own houses, which we some time since urged, if, as has ization is composed of twenty-two studious rehearsals are detrimental, men that if they did not join the performers, among whom are some then all we can say is, that music Union they could not work in that

The selection of pieces for the third and last concert has been accomplished with much care and excellent judgment, and the result will prove that on no former occasion has there been so fine a display of classical music, vocal and instrumental, as that which will greet the ears of the Philharmonics and their friends at Shoaf's Hall on Thursday evening next.

> How Mr. Wilson Captured a Couple of Corn Thieves.

For some time past, the corn crib of Mr. Wilson, a farmer living about three and a half miles southwest of the city, has been entered during the night, and corn taken therefrom by some unknown thieves. Last Sunday night, at a very late hour, Mr. Wilson was awakened by a noise near his corn crib, and hastily throwing on his clothes, and arming himself with a long club, he ran out to eatch the thieves, as they really were. He saw them loading up a wagon with the corn, but they became aware of his exit from the house as soon as he opened the door, it you oblige, and whipping up their herses they started off, through the gate. By taking a short-cut, Mr. Wilson caught up with the wagon, climbed up the rear end, and raised the club. The brace of thieves thinking it was a gun, tried to protect their heads, and then tumbled off the wagon nearly frightened to death. Mr. Wilson jumped off also, and caught one of them before he could regain his feet. Meantime the other fellow, taking advantage of the situation, overtook the wagon, and drove off in triumph. The captured corn-thief begged most piteously, and said he came only to help his comrade, who did all the stealing, On his promising never to be caught in a similar scrape, and agreeing to settle up for all the corn that had been stolen, Mr. Wilson let him go. The names of both of these sneak thieves are known to Mr. Wilson, who proposes to make it hot for them if they do not pay for the corn

How Union Men Treated an Ex-Convict. Who was Trying to Become an Honest and a Better Man.

A great deal has been written eference to State Prisons and Protective Unions, and it is a very lifficult matter for one of my education and abilities to dwell upon. course through life, especially in the last year has been very checkbut still I strive to hold up my head and to face society. I would you to place this communicaiion in your valuable columns, if you thing it proper for the purpose of bringing before the eyes of the public, the mean actions exercised by the Painters' Union of Omaha. On the 1st day of May, 1873, I came to the city of Omaha, for the purpose of engaging in the work of painting. As I was a workman of no mean order, I soon found employment with the firm of Lehman & Beard. Several weeks afterward I took to drinking, and while intoxjeated I broke the laws of the State of Nebraska. I was confined in the county jail for the period of forty days, and after a severe lecture from the Hon. Judge Lake, was sentenced to one year at hard labor in the State Prison. I was taken to institution and served ten months and twenty-seven days, balance of the year I allowed by law for good conduct and was discharged on last Wednesday morning. I made up my mind to stop drinking and came to this city for the purpose of trying to be an honest man and good citizen. I called on my old employers, and as they knew the circumstances of my case they offered me work, which I eagerly accepted. I worked Wednesday and Thursday, and a great many times I was abused by these socalled Union men by their mentioning to strangers that I had just come out of the State prison. I bore up under their taunts and tried to do what was right. entertainment. With regard to the But they still hampered at me until they saw that it was no use, for I
