ANOTHER interesting essay on horticulture from the facile pen of Mr. J. Sterling Morton, will soon appear under appropriate sensation head lines in the Omaha Herald. It will be devoted exclusively to the German element, with a view to Senatorial possibilities. The title. How I raise and plant cabbages, DOCTOR JOHNSON says he does not know how it was himself. He had heard Elder Shinn and other exhorters without getting excited, but when Sister Van Cott chucked him gently under the chin, he was completely overcome by the weight of religious emotion. He followed her to the mourner's bench with the mental reservation that he would give up the Elysian garden just as soon as Judge Dudly is elected to the State Senate.

Col. Noteware distributed among his friends last spring, packages of "Italian flower seed, selected with an especial view to the adaptability of our soil and climate." The editor's wife was one of the lucky little ladies who recieved a package, and planted the door yard full of those Italian flower seeds and watched them as only a woman can watch to see the first leafcome forth, Well, they came in due time. Those in the diamond shaped bed turned out to be radishes. Then we laughed at the coincident; but when those in the circular bed divulged into white beans the thing was not quite so funny, and when those in the rows along the walk showed unmistakable evidence of being onlons our better half got furious, and said some discouraging things about the Honorable State Superintendent of Immigation, but yesterday it assumed a gloomier aspect—if rossible—when an expert pronounced the remaining bed to contain nothing but rutabagas, sauliflower, and cabbages. The Colonel once had a warm friend in the person of our better half, but the jig is up now. No United States Senate for you, Colonel. You might as well give up the chase. Your political goose is cooked. A man that can't distinguish flower seeds from "garden sass" can never represent the Grangers of Nebraska anywhere .-

Schuyler Register.
This is just what some people have all along suspected. The Adjutant General of Nebraska admits that he does not know beans. He is a leading Granger, and yet he does not know a cabbage from a pumpkin, until after they have sprouted out of the ground. Such profound ignorance is indeed lamentable, in the midst of so much undeveloped horticultural intelligence. What will Governor Furnas say now?

Mr. Boutwell said he still adhered to the opinion expressed four years ago against the moiety system. He would support the proposed section.
With regard to the case of Phelps &
Dodge he had no judgment to express, but would advise Dodge to go into court where his testimony could be heard, and if it appeared he violated the law unintentionally the secretary of the treasury could remit the fine. He didn't believe Dodge was responsible, but there was a mystery connected with the transactions of the firm. The amendment was rejected, 26 to 21.

the purpose for which it was to be applied, and the section of law which authorized such application of the public funds. Mullett demurred at this, and was about to interpose objection to such a proceeding. His mouth was instantly closed by the new Secretary, telling him that hereafter every official in the department was to be responsible to him alone, and that the one man in the treasury department, who proposed to be responsible to the President, and the people, for the management of the treasury, was named Bristow. Mullett retired.

Boston, June 8. A special from Newport, R. I. says in a fog this morning, between Block Island and Point Judith, the steamer Providence, of the Fall River Line, came in collision with the schooner J. D. Hart, from Philadelphia, with coal for Portsmouth. latter's crew, save those on watch, were in their births, and out three of themhad the presence, of mind to jump on board the steamer, believing their vessel to be sink-ing. The captain and one sailor were left on board, and, as quick as lightning, both vessels separated from each other, on account of the fog. A small boat was immediatepushed off from the steamer to search for the schooner, and in about two hours were successful, to joy of the remainder of crew, who believed their comrades to have been lost, together with the vessel. To the astonishment of everybody, the vessel was apparently tight, and the only in-jury received was the carrying away of her bowsprit, and a portion of her mainsail and jib. The Cap-tain, however, was found on deck, insensible, having been seriously injured by the collision. His son was of the number who had jumped on board the steamer.
