Congressional Short Comings. The Railroad Land Tax Bill Butchered

Incidental Humors of the National Capital.

|Special Correspondence of the BEE.| WASHINGTON, June 26.

The days of the Forty-third Congress are numbered. T-morrow afternoon will witness the desertion of the "Wind Cave," as the "Frog Bank" will dissipate into thin air. Representatives and Senhomes, and put on the panoply of him, war for the coming fall elections. capital in the coming campaign, and few there are, but aspire to come back again. The civil rights bill has been unable to keep above water, and has met an ignominious death. The civil service bug bear has met a similar fate.

A currency bill has finally passed both houses, as recommended by the conference committee. While it does not meet fully the necessi-ties of the west, it affords a partial relief to the stringent state of the money market of the West and The volume of greenback currency is fixed at $382,000,000, and the reserves are released for circulation. Lastly, provides for the redistribution of the currency, and for free banking. This willgive to the West additional banking privileges to the extent of some $50,-

The land tax bill, which promised such good results to the depleted exchequer of the State, in compelling the payment of delinquent taxes from the railroads, and which passed the House by the personal and untiring effort of Judge Crounse, has virtually been defeated in the Sen-

A Senate bill has been reported by the committee in place of the House bill which absolves the U. P. and Central Pacific, and their branches, from, and obligations already incurred; requires the government to pay the cost of surveys, and simply requires the roads to pay their taxes in the future. The tenor of the Senare bill bears upon the face of it, legislation in the interest of the railroads, instead of the interest of the government, and the treasury of the State of Nebraska. sage is quite questionable in either House. The great event of the season in the House was the speech of Ben Butler upon the San-born contracts and the Custom House frauds. The announcement that "old Ben" was to "let loose the dogs of war" filled the galleries to suffocation. Every member of the House was in his seat, and when the champion of invective broke loose, the entire House was all attention. No such scathing deunciation, nor such tearless onslaught against an enemy has been made upon the floor of the House in many a day. He denounced in open terms the perjury and enormous frauds upon the revenue committed by the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co., the senior member of which was President of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York One of their frauds was long prac-ticed under a law which was passed several years ago, and which was intended to encourage a taste for art in our country. For this purpose, statuary and works of art made "duty free," and immediately Massrs, Phelps, Dodge & Co. began to import "God-desses of Liberty," The Father of his Country, and other illustrious heroes done up in lead; and immediately upon their arrival went into the melting pot, and were quickly transformed into pig lead. What an inglorious fate for the Goddess of Liberty and her associates. Old Benjamin frequently referred to himself as "old cock-eye," and challenged his enemies to enter the arena with him. Sanborn is gvidently a friend of Benjamin, and he considers that the Sanborn investigation was a stab at him, Butler, by his enemies. Foster, who has been his opponent, was completely demoralized, and Butler had read the letter which Foster had written concerning him, and which Butler had obtained possession of in some unaccountable manner. The galleries, cheered and applauded Butler, and the speaker threatened to clear them if any further demonstrations were made. Butler has the reputation of standing by his friends, though the heavens fall, and single handed, he floored all opposition in this matter. That little sprite and congressional aggravation, Vinnie Ream, has again got on a rampage, and besieged Congress to let her bust somebody to the tune of several thousand dollars. This time it is likely to be Admiral Farragut. It would be a national blessing, and a saving to the treasury, if some one would bust her off the stage of Nebraska is well represented at the National Capitol at present. Among the new arrivals, safe and well, are Messrs, J. Millard, W. A. Brown and J. B. Newman. The latter gentleman from Nebraska

A little incident occurred at the National Hotel, a few days since, which is worthy of note here. We had just stepped into the barber shop and inquired of the proprietor if he thought we had hirsuite enough to entitle us to a ten cent shave, when we were attracted by several pretty loud expressions, to the opposite side of the room. Here we found our friend Taffe, gesticulating wildly, and anathamatizing somebody in language not found in the commandments; in his hand was an old silk hat, which had seen better days; he held it up to our gaze; we ventured to enquire what's Will by the sid of guardian spirits, obtain or any one a view of the past, present and future. No fees charged in cases of sickness, applied of my bran new silk hat, and left this dilapidated concern. Why the confounded idiot; why just look here." And the hat went down fess that is unfortunate, but I don't see any way out of the difficulty but to put that hat away, save it, it will keep, the progress of human events makes great changes in the existence of men, and the time may come when your cranium will fill the circumference of that hat; in fact, if I judge correctly, it is not far distant either. I understand you are a candidate for the next Congress, and if this be so, before the next election you will have a swelled head that will make the circumference of that hat without doubt." The Judge vanished. We took a little balm of gilead on our chin. In come a dignified gertleman that might have been a Congressman; possibly he had raised potatoes and practiced law in the vicinity of Fort 'alhoun: but then I won't swear to it. At any rate he had a little matter of importance to attend to at that

own hat. Well, Judge, I must con-

I The Congressmen are now studying wouldn't give a pen-wiper for a thousand such; what the d—l am I to do. Why the confounded thing won't cover my bump of esteem, and I am afraid to let the sun strike on my bump of veneration, for then I would not appreciate the kindness of my friends when they send me back to Congress again. Well, I suppose I shall have to try me another, I will send this out to "Strick," I guess it will just about

WASHINGTON, June 26. The Treasury Department is making extensive preparations to re-trieve all mutilated currency, and Section 3, of new law sums of $1,000 or any sum thereof of miscellaneous notes, issued of one or numerous banks, may be sent to Treasurer Spinner and new greenbacks obtained in exchange. The old notes are destroyed, and reissues of the same distributed among the banks that originally issued them. In this way the currency of the country, both national bank notes and greebacks will be vuickly renewed, and kept in good condition. The section providing for this long needed work is regarded as one of the best in the new currency bill. Information is eagerly sought for by Congressmen and other parties of the comptroller of currency respecting the allotment of circulation for the territories and western and southern states. There is every indication that capital in these sections is ready to be invested in national banks as fast as circulation can be granted. The comptroller states that within thirty days he will be informed as to what demands for new banks exactly will be under the new ourrency law. The comptroller of currency is about to make another call on national banks for reports, so that he can see what is their condition. Under the new currency law the banks will be able to make a much better shaving than heretofore, as under the new law they are not required to keep near so large a reserve on hand.
