By the Telegraph.

In 1864, a rather good looking, well dressed young man, arrived at the Osborn House, Rochester, N. .. of which Mr. George Thrall, now of the Grand Central Hotel, Omaha, was then the proprietor. This young man registered as "J. H. Thompson, New York."

He was allowed to run up a little bill there, and permitted to obtain a small sum of money from the hotel, under a false representation. He escaped arrest, and jumped the city. In 1873, while proprietor of the Battle House, Mobile, Mr. Thrall noticed the registry of "J. H. Tomlinson, New Orleans." Recognizing the hand-writing, and the same initials upon his register about nine years before at Rochester, the clerks were at once notified to watch Tomlinson, and not to let him run up a larger bill than his baggage would secure, and not to permit him to get $25.00. it out of the house by piece-meal. He was on that day out driving on the Shell road, and when he returned, it was just in time to take the train, so he paid his bill and got away without being recognized. A few months later, Mr. Thrall was sitting on the front galiery of the Battle House, when a well dressed man, of the same general description of J. H. Thompson, except about forty pounds heavier, presented himself and introduced himself, remarking that he had been an occasional guest at the Osburn, at Rochester. He oresented a business card upon which his name appeared, as a member of a firm in New Orleans. Soon after that Mr. Thrall met Tomlinson on Canal street. New Orleans, but as he was not seen, and not caring to be recognized by him, was allowed to pass on. Mr. Thrall was too busy to investigate whether such a firm as the one Tomlinson had represented

The city editor of the BEE, happening in about that time, was informed that "Harry Tomlinson, of New York, seemed to be an old friend of Mr. Thrall," etc. A little personal item appeared in the BEE the same evening to the effect that Mr. Harry Tomlinson, a friend of Mr. Thrall, was in the city on a visit, and was stopping at the Grand Central Hotel. A morning paper, not lacking in enterprise, repubfrom Chicago. He has thrown up lished the item. Mr. Thrall inquired into the matter, and found that Tomlinson had not been instrumental in publishing it, and as it had all occurred by mistake, he did not press, not deeming it of any importance, believing, however, that Tomlinson had reformed, and that he was representing a business firm in the East, as his cards set forth. Under this impression, Tomlinson was spared the mortification of exposure, and was allowed to rest under the hallucination that he was not identified as Thompson. Tomlinson, while here, introduced himself to several army officers, professing to have been connected with the First Infan-Branson, Buffalo; W T Rickey, Co- try. Captain H. W. Cremer, of the china and glassware house of J. T. Griffin & Co., had received a postal card, purporting to be from the Mutual Glass Company, of Pittsburgh, stating that Mr. Tomlinson, their agent, would arrive about June 20th, when he would be glad to receive their fall order for goods, &c., &c. This card was without much doubt sent by Tomlinson himself. Upon the strength of this card, and also upon Tomlinson's relationship with a well-known old citizen, together with his acquaintance with Mr. Thrall and several officers here, Captain Cremer endorsed his draft on the Mutual Glass Company for Ionilinson at once had the draft cashed, pocketed the money, paid his hotel bill, and left for the West. Almost immediately after his departure, Captain Cremer received

Pittsburg, June 17.

This postal card was in every sense of the word an eye-opener to Capt. A Novel Procession. The enterprising agricultural implement firm of Shugart, Lininger & Wiess, correctly anticipating a general rush of the Grangers to the city Saturday to attend the circus, advertised their business during the morning by a novel and interesting street procession of their mowers, reapers, binders rakes, &c. As the long line preceded by a brass band moved through the streets, all the machines being in motion, it attracted great attention, and the firm was universally commended for its enterprise in getting up this novel exhibition.
