TWENTY thousand dollars is all that an insurance agent demands of the Omaha Bee for a blasted reputation. That agent has been slandered and his character damaged to that extent, but not altogether ruined, and yet we are astomished that the demand is so moderate. If it had been a lightning rod pedler or a sewing machine agent Rosewater would not have been let off so easily, and our advice to him now is to pay that amount and settle up before it is too late. Any man who is capable of saying anything mean enough to damage the reputation of the average insurance agent ought to be hung.—Kearney News.
