Are Your Cows Like These?

Two cows were in the Nebraska University Farm herd a short time ago which looked very much alike. Most people, perhaps, would have judged one to be a little better than the other. The average feed of one for two years cost $64 15. The average feed for the other was 35 cents a year more. The one that it cost $64.15 to feed produced about $10 a year more than she cost. The one that it cost 35 cents a year more to feed returned five times the income of the other above cost of feed. Not even the dairy experts could have guessed that. The way they found out was to weigh and test the milk, the same as they do with all of the cows of the state dairy herd. As a small milk tester and scales cost but a few dollars, this pratice can be carried on by any farmer.
