New Market for Light Horses

The European war has made a ready sale for light weight horses that are usually hard to market, said a member of the department of animal husbandry at the Nebraska University Farm the other day. The horses bought for the cavalry weigh but 1,100 pounds, stand 15 hands or 60 inches high, and with a few exceptions are of solid dark colors. A few dark grays, however, have been bought as well as a few cream colored with light mane and tail. The officers of the French army who have visited Nebraska demand reasonably well broken and upstanding animals with a great deal of durability and with good wind and good eyes. No objection is made to small wire cuts and other minor blemishes. Mares as well as geldings are bought for about $150. As the war is responsible for cutting off the sale of horses for the South in connection with the cotton industry, the European demand relieves an otherwise overloaded market.
