Manager Cassil has installed a Wurlitzer unit orchestra in the Orpheum. It is on the plan of an electric piano, and has base and snare drums and other attachments, and is operated by electric power.
On Monday evening of this week, a number of friends of Mark McConkey surprised this gentleman by gathering at his home, in honor of his birthday. A light luncheon was served, and at a late hour they departed wishing him many happy returns of the day. All those present report a very enjoyable evening.
The advance sale of tickets for "The Battle Cry of Peace" have exceeded all expectations of the management of the Orpheum up to this time. The Friday night seats are pretty well picked over. Manager Cassil is expecting a record run of this great production and has an extensive advertising campaign under way for the surrounding territory between Superior and Oxford.
We have this week, installed another press in our office. The new machine is a 11x17 Gordon job press, and will handle a larger "form" than the one now in use. We will now be in a position to handle "rush jobs" to a better advantage, as hereto we were compelled to finish one job of press work before beginning another. Our order also included more new type and material, that was required, in order to give our patrons the very latest in printed matter.
The Battle Cry of Peace photoplayed at the People's theatre in Smith Center the first two nights of this week drew quite a crowd from Lebanon. The picture is a continuous cry for preparedness and undoubtedly financed by the U. S. munition manufacture magnates. However, it was one of the best photoplays we ever saw on the screen, and there were several scenes in it that must have cost a large sum of money to photograph. The one strong point in the entire picture was, "Power is peace, and reverse the newspaper slogan: prepare for war, to prepare for peace." It was screened four times to an overflowing house and a large number were turned away at the door at the last performance.—Lebanon Times.
