King of the Khyber Rifles

By TALBOT MUNDY

The Most Picturesque Romance of the Decade

Copyright by The Bobbe-Merrill Company

KING IS LED TO VISIT A VAST CAVE THROUGH WHICH AN UNDERGROUND RIVER FLOWS, AND IN A GREAT CAVERN MEETS THOUSANDS OF FANATICS

Synopsis.—At the beginning of the world war Capt, Athelstan King of the British Indian army and of its secret service, is ordered to Delhi to meet Yasmini, a dancer, and go with her to Kinjan to meet the outlaws there who are said by spies to be preparing for a spihad or holy war. On his way to Delhi King quietly foils a plan to assassinate him and gets evidence that Yasmini is after him. He meets Rewa Gunga, Yasmini's man, who says she has already gone north, and at her town house witnesses queer dances. Ismail, an Afridi, becomes his body servant and protector. He rescues some of Yasmini's hillmen and takes them north with him, tricking the Rangar into going ahead. The Rangar deserts him at a dangerous time. He meets his brother at All Masjid fort. The disguise he assumes there fools even the sharp-eyed cutthroats composing his guard. He enters Khinjan caves, thanks to his lying guides.

slew many!"

holy war had been proclaimed already.

then he was engaged on a forlorn hope.

"Nay, not yet. Bull-with-a-beard holds back yet. This was a little fight.

"And who is Bull-with-a-beard'?"

King wondered; but he did not ask that question because his wits were awake again. It pays not to be in too much of a hurry to know things in the

As it happened, he asked no more questions, for there came a shout at the cave entrance whose purport he did not catch, and within five minutes after that, without a word of explanation, the cave was left empty of all except his own five men. They carried away the men too sick to walk and vanished, snatching the last man away almost before King's fingers had finished tying the bandage on his wound.

Why did they go? Who shouted?"

was time."

"Why is that?" he asked Ismail.

"It is night," Ismail answered. "It

King stared about him. He had not realized until then that without aid of hand held out in front of him; his eyes had grown used to the gloom, like those of the surgeons in the sick-bays

"Who knows? There is only one

"Whose men were the last ones?"

"And whose man art thou, Ismail?"

The Afridi hesitated, and when he

Man Whom He Had Never Seen Before Leaned on a Magazine Rifle and Eyed Him as a Tiger Eyes Its same assurance in his voice as once it is night. Sleep against the toll to-cave, but the task was hopeless. For one thing he was so weary that his very bones were water. He appointed two-hour watches, to relieve one an-

"I am hers! Be thou hers, too! But there had been.

spoke at last there was not quite the King asked him, trying a new line.

here who gives orders. We be many below the waterline in Nelson's fleet.

"But who shouted?"

who obey," said Ismail.

"Bull-with-a-beard's."

But the man laughed at him.

The jihad shall come later!"

CHAPTER XI.-Continued.

"Are there devils in Tophet? Fire and my veins are one!"

The man did not notice the eagerbeaming out of King's hornrimmed spectacles, but Ismail did; it med to him time to prove his virtues as assistant.

"This is the famous hakim Kurram Khan," he boasted. "He can cure anything, and for a very little fee!"

The man looked incredulous, but King drew the covering from his row Instruments and bottles.

Take a chance!" he advised. "None but the brave wins anything!"

Ismail and Darya Khan were new to the business and enthusiastic. They had the man down, held tight on the Soor to the huge amusement of the rest, before he could even protest; and his howls of rage did him no good, for Ismail drove the hilt of a knife between his open jaws to keep them open.

A very large proportion of King's stores consisted of morphia and cocaine. He injected enough cocaine to Seaden the man's nerves, and allowed It time to work. Then he drew out three back teeth in quick succession, to make sure he had the right one.

Ismail let the victim up, and Darya Khan gave him water in a brass cup. Utterly without pain for the first time for days, the man was as grateful as a wolf freed from a trap.

'Are there any others in pain in Khinjan?" King asked him. "Listen to him! What is Khinjan? Is there one man without a wound or a sore or a scar or a sickness?" "Then, tell them," said King.

The man laughed.

When I show my jaw, there will be fight to be first! Make ready, hakim!

King sat down to eat, but he had not anished his meal—he had made the last little heap of rice into a ball with his fingers, native style, and was mopping up the last of the curried gravy with it-when the advance guard of the lame and the halt and the sick made its appearance. The cave's entrance became jammed with them, and no riot ever made more noise.

"Hakim! Ho, hakim! Where is the akim who draws teeth? Where is the men who knows yunani?"

Ten men burst down the passage all egether, all clamoring, and one man wasted no time at all but began to tear away bloody bandages to show his ound. King rolled up his sleeves and began, so that eagerness gave place to wonder. The desperate need of winning his first trick, made him horror-proof; and nobody waiting for the next turn was troubled because the man under the knife screamed a little or bled more than usual.

When they died-and more than one did die-men carried them out and Sung them over the precipice into the waterfall below.

Ismail and Darya Khan became choosers of the victims. They seized a man, laid him on the bed, tore off his disgusting bandages and held their breath until the awful resulting stench had more or less dispersed. Then King would probe or lance or bandage as he saw fit, using anesthetics when he must, but managing mostly without

They almost flung money at him. He sed money and clothes and every other thing they gave him into a corner at the back of the cave, and nobody tried to steal them back, although man suspected of honesty in that sompany would have been tortured to eath as an heretic and would have

For hour after gruesome hour he tolled over wounds and sores such as mly battles and evil living can proe, until men began to come at last with fresh wounds, all caused by bullets, wrapped in bandages on which morrow. There be many sick in Khinthe blood had caked but had not grown

"There has been fighting in the Khy-" somebody informed him, and he stopped with lancet in midair to listen, scanning a hundred faces swiftly in the amoky lamplight. There were ten other until dawn, and flung himself m a newcomer, and it was he who

"Fighting in the Khyber! Aye! We of Yasmini all night long.

in Peshawur—and that the cave be on the right of his neck, not very far came filled with the strange intoxicat- from the jugular. ing scent that had first wooed his senses in her reception room in Delhi. | got in the Khyber the other day?"

He dreamed that she called 'im by name. First, "King sahib!" Then strange things."

"He sleeps!" said the same voice launched already." presently. "It is good that he sleeps!" And in his sleep he thought that a shifting position uneasily, as if afraid shadowy Ismail grunted an answer. When he awoke at last it was after dawn, and light shone down the passage into the cave.

"Ismail!" he shouted, for he was thirsty. But there was no answer. "Darva Khan!"

go to the cave mouth, summon his men, them back into their fort! Aye! we who were no doubt sleeping. But there was no Ismail near the entrance-no out of my sight!" "Not a jihad yet?" King asked, as if Darya Khan-nor any of the other the world might be coming to an end. men. The horse was gone. So was the The words were startled out of him. mule. So was the harness, and every-Under other circumstances he would never have asked that question so directly; but he had lost reckoning of everything but these poor devils' dreadthose lying about in confusion when he ful need of doctoring, and he was like woke. a man roused out of a dream. If a

"Ismail!" he shouted at the top of his lungs, thinking they might all be outside.

He heard a man hawk and spit, close to the entrance, and went out to see. A man whom he had never seen before leaned on a magazine rifle and eyed him as a tiger eyes his prey.

his rifle to the port. "Why not?" King asked him.

"Allah! When a camel dies in the Khyber do the kites ask why? Go in!" He thought then of Yasmini's bracelet, that had always gained him at least civility from every man who saw it. He held up his left wrist and knew that instant why it felt uncomfortable. The bracelet had disappeared!

He turned back into the cave to hunt for it, and the strange scent greeted him again. In spite of the surrounding stench of drugs and filthy wounds. there was no mistaking it. If it had been her special scent in Delhi, as Saunders swore it was, and her special scent on the note Darya Khan had carried down the Khyber, then it was hers now, and she had been in the cave.

He hunted high and low and found no bracelet. His pistol was gone, too, and his cartridges, but not the dagger, wrapped in a handkerchief, under his shirt. The money, that his patients had brought him, lay on the floor untouched. It was an unusual robber who had robbed him.

"Who's 'Bull-with-a-beard'?" he wondered. "Nobody interfered with me until I doctored his men. He's in opposition. That's a fair guess. Now, who in thunder-by the fat lord Harrycan 'Bull-with-a-beard' be? And why fighting in the Khyber so early as all this? And why does 'Bull-with-a-beard,' whoever he is, hang back?"

CHAPTER XII.

They came and changed the guard two hours after dawn, to the accompaniment of orders growled through the mist, and the crash of rifle-butts grounding on the rock path. King went to the cave entrance, to look the new man over; he was a Mahsudi-no sweeter to look at and no less treacherous for the fact. Also, that he had boils all over the back of his neck. He lastingly urging him to hurry. was not likely to be better tempered because of that fact, either. But it is an ill wind that blows no good to the secret service.

world at large, or as much as he could se wide. There is an end to pain!" he went on, adjusting his horn-rimmed spectacles. "I lanced a man's botis last night, and it hurt him, but he must be well today."

"Go in!" growled the guard. "She says it is sorcery! She says none are to let thee touch them!" "I can heal bolls!" said King, retiring into the cave. Then, from a safe distance down the passage, he added a word or two to sink in as the hours went by. At intervals throughout the day Yasmini sent him food by silent messengers. It is not easy to worry and eat heartily at one and the same time. Having eaten, he rolled up his sleeves and native-made cotton trousers and proceeded to clean the cave. After that he overhauled his stock of drugs and instruments, repacking them and making ready against opportunity.

"As I told that heathen with a gun out there, there's an end to every-King made a little effort to clean the thing!" he reflected. "May this come soon !" The second guard that afternoon proved even less communicative than the first, up to the point when, to lessen his ennui, King began to whistle. men who held lamps for him, one of on a clean bed. He was asleep before Each time he came near the entrance his head had met the pillow; and for the new guard could catch a few bars all he knew to the contrary he dreamed of the tune. After a little while the ing back to bid King hurry and never hook-nosed ruffian began to sing the were a little lashkar, but we drove It seemed to him that she came into words to it, in a voice like a forgotten the cave—she, the woman of the faded | dog's. So King stopped at the entrance photograph the general had given him and saw then a blood-soaked bandage

> "Hah!" said King. "Was that wound "Nay. Here in Khinjan."

"A man told me last night," said "Kurram Khan!" And her voice was King, drawing on imagination without surprisingly familiar. But dreams are any compunction at all, "that the fight in the Khyber was because a jihad is "That man lied!" said the guard, to talk too much.

"So I told him!" answered King. "I told him there never will be another Jihad."

"Then thou art a greater liar than he!" the guard answered hotly. "There will be a jihad when she is ready, such ple. Again there was no answer. He an one as never yet was! India shall called each of the other men by name bleed for all the fat years she has lain with the same result. He decided to unplundered! Not a throat of an unbeliever in the world shall be left unslit! No jihad? Thou liar! Get in

So King retired into the cave, with something new to think about. Was she planning the fihad! Or pretending thing he had, except the drugs and in- to plan one? Every once in a while struments and the presents the sick the guard leaned far into the cave had given him; he had noticed all mouth and hurled adjectives at him, the mildest of which was a well of information. If his temper was the temper of the "Hills," it was easy to read disappointment for a jihad that should have been already but had been postponed. King let him alone and paced the cave for hours.

He was squatting on his bed-end in the dark, like a spectacled image of Buddha, when the first of the three "No farther!" he growled, bringing men came on guard again and at last Ismail came for him holding a pitchy torch that filled the dim passage full of acrid smoke and made both of them cough. Ismail was red-eyed with it.

"Come!" he growled. "Come, little hakim!" Then he turned on his heel at once, as if afraid of being twitted with desertion. He seemed to want to get outside, where he could keep out of range of words, yet not to wish to seem unfriendly.

But King made no effort to speak to him, following in slience out on to the dark ledge above the waterfall and noticing that the guard with the boils was back again on duty. He grinned evilly out of a shadow as King passed. "Make an end!" he advised. "Jump, hakim, before a worse thing happens!" To illustrate the suggestion he kicked a loose stone over the cliff, and the movement caused him to bend his neck and so inadvertently to hurt his bolls. He cursed, and there was pity in King's voice when he spoke next.

"Do they hurt thee?" "Aye, like the devil! Khinjan is a place of plagues!" "I could heal them," King said, passing on, and the man stared hard. "Come!" boomed Ismail through the darkness, shaking the torch to make it burn better and beckoning impatiently, and King hurried after him, leaving behind a savage at the cave mouth who fingered his sores and wondered, muttering, leaning on a rifle, muttering and muttering again as if he had seen a new light.

Instead of waiting for King to catch up, Ismail began to lead the way at great speed along a path that descended gradually until it curved round the end of the chasm and plunged into a tunnel where the darkness grew opaque. For thirty minutes he led swiftly down a crazy devil's stairway of uneven bowlders, stopping to lend a hand at the worst places, but ever-

Then the hell-mouth gloom began to grow faintly luminous, and the waterfall's thunder burst on their ears from close at hand. They emerged into "There is an end to everything," he fresh wet air and a sea of sound, on a remarked presently, addressing the rock ledge like the one above. Ismail raised the torch and waved it. The see of it through the cave mouth. "A fire and smoke wandered up, until they hill is so high, a pool so deep, a river flattened on a moving opal dome, that prisoned all the noises in the world. "Earth's Drink!" he announced, waving the torch and then shutting his mouth tight, as if afraid to voice sacri-

It was the river, million-colored in the torchlight, pouring from a halfmile-long slash in the cliff above them and plunging past them through the gloom toward the very middle of the world. Somewhere it met rock bottom and boiled there, for a roar like the sea's came up from deeps unimagin-

He watched the overturning dome until his senses reeled. Then he crawled on hands and knees to the ledge's brink and tried to peer over. But Ismail dragged him back.

"Come!" he howled; but in all that din his shout was like a whisper. "How deep is it?" King bellowed

"Allah! Ask him who made it!" The fear of the falls was on the Afridi, and he tugged at King's arm in a frenzy of impatience. Suddenly he let go and broke into a run. King he was seeing that night of a kind that trotted after him. After ten minutes' hurrying uphili he guessed they must be level with the river, in a tunnel running nearly parallel. Ismail kept lookpaused once to rest.

"Come!" he urged flercely. "This until the swivel rattled, and the of-after that King had to do his best to keep the Afridi's back in sight.

They began after a time to hear set purpose, Ismail forced a way voices and to see the smoky glare made through the already seated crowd and by other torches. Then Ismail set the drew King down into the cramped pace yet faster, and they became the last two of a procession of turbaned arena to be able to catch the guards' men, who tramped along a winding tunnel into a great mountain's womb. The sound of slippers clicking and rutching on the rock floor swelled and died and swelled again as the tunnel led from cavern into cavern.

In one great cave they came to every man beat out his torch and tossed it on a heap. After that there grinned as he watched the crowd dodge was a ledge above the height of a man's head on either side of the tunnel, and along the ledge little oil-burning lamps were spaced at measured intervals. A quarter of a mile farther along there were two sharp turns in into the chant, only louder than before, the tunnel, and then at last a sea of and by that much more terrible. Cymnoise and a veritable blaze of light.

homesick, for out of the mountain's laise." And the bundred began an very womb brayed a music-box, such Afridi sword dance, than which there as the old-time carousals made use of before the days of electricity and like can only be seen under the shadow steam. It was being worked by inex- of the "Hills." pert hands, for the time was something jerky; but it was robbed of its tinny meanness and even lent majesty by the hugeness of a cavern's roof, as well as by the crashing, swinging music it played-wild-wonderful-invented for lawless hours and a kingless peo-

"Marchons !- Citoyens !--" The procession began to tramp in time to it, and the rock shook. They deployed to left and right into a space so vast that the eye at first refused to to see between them. try to measure it. It was the hollow core of a mountain, filled by the se ed and flung back a thousand colors at the flickering light below. Across the cavern's farther end for a space of two hundred yards the great river rushed, plunging out of a great fanged gap and hurrying out of view down another one, licking smooth banks on its way with a hungry sucking sound.

"Come!" He Urged Flercely. "This Leads to the 'Heart of the Hills!'

There were little lamps everywhere perched on ledges amid the stalactites, and they suffused the whole cavern in golden glow. In the midst of the cavern a great arena had been left bare, and thousands of turbaned men squatted round it in rings. At the end where the river formed a tangent to them the rings were flattened, and at that point they were cut into by the ramp of a bridge, and by a lane left to connect the bridge with the arena. The bridge end formed a nearly square platform, about fourteen feet above the floor, and the broad track thence to the arena, as well as all the arena's boundary, had been marked off by great earthenware lamps, whose greasy smoke streaked up and was lost by the wind among the stalactites.

"Greek lamps, every one of 'em!" King whispered to himself, but he them. Look! See! Tell me truly wasted no time just then on trying to explain how Greek lamps had ever got there. There was too much else to watch and wonder at.

No steps led down from the bridge end to the floor; toward the arena it was blind. But from the bridge's farther end across the hurrying water stairs had been hewn out of the rock wall and led up to a hole of twice a man's height, more than fifty feet above water level.

On either side of the bridge end s passage had been left clear to the river edge, and nobody seemed to care to invade it, although it was not marked off in any way. Each passage was about fifty feet wide and quite straight. But the space between the bridge end and the arena, and the arena itself, had to be kept free from trespassers by fifty swaggering ruffians, armed to the teeth.

Every man of the thousands there had a knife in evidence, but the arena guards had magazine rifles as well as Khyber tulwars. Nobody else wore firearms openly. Some of the arena guards bore huge round shields of prehistoric pattern of a size and sort he had never seen before, even in museums. But there was very little that he had seen before anywhere!

The guards lolled insolently, conscious of brute strength and special favor. When any man trespassed with so much as a toe beyond the ring of lamps, a guard would slap his rifle-butt leads to the 'Heart of the Hills' !" And | fender would scurry into bounds ami the jeers of any who had seen. Shoving, kicking and elbowing with space beside him, close enough to the low laughter. But he was restless. Ho wished to get nearer yet, only there seemed no room anywhere in front.

Then a guard threw his shield down with a clang and deliberately fired his rifle at the roof. The ricochetting builet brought down a shower of splintered stone and stalactite, and he to avoid it.

Instantly a hundred men rose from different directions and raced for the arena, each with a curved sword in either hand. The yelling changed back bals crashed. The music box resumed Part of the noise made King feel its measured grinding of the "Marsellis nothing wilder in all the world. Its > Ismail seemed obsessed by the spirit of hades let loose-drawn by it, as by a magnet, although subsequent events proved him not to have been altogether without a plan. He got up, with his eyes fixed on the dance, and thrust himself and King next to some Orakzai Pathans, elbowing savagely to right and left to make room. And patience proved scarce. The nearest man reached for the ever-ready Pathan knife, but paused in the instant that his knife licked clear. From a swift side glance at King's face he changed to a full stare, his scowl slowly giving place to a grin as he recognized

> "Allah !" He drove the long blade

"Well met, hakim! See-the wound heals finely!"

Baring his shoulder under the smelly sheepskin coat, he lifted a bandage gingerly to show the clean opening out of which King had coaxed a bullet the day before. It looked wholesome and ready to heal.

"Name thy reward, hakim! We Orakzai Pathans forget no favors!" (Now that boast was a true one.)

King nodded more to himself than to the other man. He needed, for instance, very much to know who was planning a jihad, and who "Bull-witha-beard" might be; but it was not safe to confide just yet in a chance-made acquaintance. A very fair acquaintance with some phases of the East had taught him that names such as Bullwith-a-beard are often almost photographically descriptive. He rose to his feet to look. A blind man can talk, but it takes trained eyes to gather informa-

The din had increased, and it was safe to stand up and stare, because all eyes were on the madness in the middle. There were plenty besides himself who stood to get a better view, and he had to dodge from side to side

"I'm not to doctor his men. Theresound of a human crowd and hung with to be kept apart. Therefore he'll be as huge stalactites that danced and shift- far away from me now as possible, supposing he's here."

Reasoning along that line, he tried to see the faces on the far side, but the problem was to see over the dancers heads. He succeeded presently, for the Orakzai Pathan saw what he wanted, and in his anxiety to be agreeable, reached forward to pull back a box from between the ranks in front. Its owners offered instant fight, but made no further objection when they saw who wanted it and why. King wondered at their sudden change of mind.

He found a man soon who was not interested in the dancing, but who had eyes and ears apparently for everything and everybody else. He watched him for ten minutes, until at last their eyes met. Then he sat down and kicked the box back to its owners. He touched the Pathan's broad shoulder. The man smiled and bent his turbaned head to listen.

"Opposite," said King, "nearly exactly opposite—three rows from the front, counting the front row as onethere sits a man with a black beard, whose shoulders are like a buil's. As he sits he hangs his head between what his name is!"

The Pathan got up and strode forward to stand on the box, kicking aside the elbows that leaned on it and laughing when the owners cursed him. He stood on it and stared for five minutes, counting deliberately three times over. striking a finger on the palm of his hand to check himself.

"Bull-with-a-beard!" he announced at last, dropping back into place beside King. "Muhammad Anim. The mullah Muhammad Anim."

"An Afghan?" King asked. "He says he is an Afghan. But unless he lies he is from Ishtamboul (Constantinople)."

Itching to ask more questions, King the hakin Kurram Khan-blinked mildly behind his spectacles and looked like one to whom a savage might safely ease his mind.

"He bade me go to Sikaram where my village is and bring him a hundred men for his lashkar. He says he has her special favor. Wait and watch, I BAY !"

"Has he money?" asked King, apparently drawing a bow at a venture for conversation's sake. But there is an art in asking artless questions.

King witnesses wild doings in the cavern and sees harrowing sights. Yasmini appears, a lovely vision, and the army of fighters go wild with enthusiasm.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)