If some of the city parents would take to heart the old hymn, "Where is my Wandering Boy Tonight" and impress the meaning of the same upon the minds of their sons possibly the town would not be over run with a number of boys, of the high school age, who insist on staying out until almost morning, disturbing the rest of those who keep good hours. The seriousness of the matter will be brought home to the parents, when, some morning in the very near future, they find that their pet son has spent the night as a guest of the county sheriff.
