BETTER SIRE—BETTER STOCK

A few dairymen have cows producing more than 20,000 pounds of milk a year an animal, as compared with the great rank and file of dairy animals which yield an average of less than 4,000 pounds a year—not two-thirds of the average production in Denmark. In the same way, beef animals that produce premier porterhouse steaks and filet of beef of the finest, are greatly outnumbered by the hundreds of thousands of steers which yield less meat per animal and of poor quality. Millions of cattle have been raised and converted into meat at a very small profit to their growers, not because they were unfit or because they did not receive a proper ration, but because they were of poor breeding; use better blood and lots of it and not only will the meat resources of America be replete with ample supplies, but the quality of the meat will tickle the palate of the consumer to the extent that he will come back for more and thus further popularize animal husbandry pursuits.

The underlying need for improvement of livestock in the United States is to increase efficiency in production of meats and other live stock products, including dairy and poultry commodities. Economical production is one of the surest and best means of maintaining domestic trade and of meeting foregoing competition. Success in both of these fields is necessary to support a livestock industry of sufficient size to meet the future food needs of the country, and through animal fertilizer and other by-products, develop a well balanced agriculture. The value of live stock depends largely on good care, housing, feeding and disease control as well as on breeding. Good breeding, however, determines the fundamental capacity of an animal to be profitable to its owner. Accordingly, the replacement of scrub sires by good purebreds is the fundamental basis for improvement. Although the use of good females is likewise important, good sires bring results more quickly and economically in most cases.

Purebred Sires Rapidly Improve Herds

Considerable confusion is prevalent in the minds of many farmers apparently concerning the exact meaning of the words purebred, thoroughbred, full bred, cross bred, grade, scrub, and mongrel. All these terms are fully explained in the printed matter being prepared for distribution to persons interested in the campaign.

Once the use of purebred sires becomes general throughout the country, the process of grading up will be rapid. Innumerable experiments and the practical results of experienced breeders demonstrate infallibility that where good sires are used, or in with three or four generations most of the individuals in the scrub herds may be made closely to resemble pure bred animals in appearance. In the course of a few generations, where skillful breeding is now practiced, erstwhile scrub stock may be upgraded to such an extent that for the production of meat and other animal products the members of such herds are practically as useful as purebreds. The chief difference between a high-grade animal and a purebred is in the value for breeding. Only the latter can be used in producing pure bred breeding stock. Furthermore it is only pure bred or full blood animals which

The betterment of the Nation's livestock is a topic which has been preached for years from public platforms from which agricultural information has been disseminated. The agricultural press has also spread the doctrine of better blood and the use of superior sires. Agricultural colleges, breeders' associations, livestock organizations, agricultural fairs and business interests have been responsible for much of the progress already made and unquestionably will be staunch advocates and exponents of the big drive of Uncle Sam for better stock.
