YOUNGSTERS NOT DISMAYED
The drop in farm prices is not discouraging members of boys' and girls' clubs. This is especially true of those interested in livestock raising. Inquiries and other information gathered by the college of agriculture extension service point to the fact that probably 3,000 boys and girls will be members of livestock clubs this year. At least 175 pig clubs will be formed, or almost double the number of last year. There were twenty-two calf clubs last year and indications are that the number may be doubled this year.

The low price at which purebred stock may be purchased this year is given as one of the reasons so many juniors desire membership in livestock clubs. Raising stock is also usually profitable, as well as highly interesting for the youngsters. Hall county, which had no pig clubs last year, has asked for five this year. Howard county had only one pig club last year; this year it wants four. Several other counties are either new in the work or are increasing the number of their livestock clubs.

Poultry clubs are continuing popular and the number this year will likely go much over the eighty mark reached last year. Poultry work for boys and girls is conducted thru three progressive stages, first year clubs devoting their attention to general poultry raising, second year clubs to egg production, and third year clubs to poultry breeding. Clay and Nuckolls counties have several clubs which have reached the third stage.

There is evidence that many boys and girls are losing interest in garden, rabbit, corn, potato and some other clubs which have been so popular in the past. Strawberry, grape and sheep represent new kinds of clubs for which there is some demand this year.

One of the features of the club work this year is the way girls are breaking into the livestock game. While about one-fifth of the livestock club members last year were girls, those directing the work at the college of agriculture would not be surprised to see nearly half the membership girls this year. Many girls are asking admission to livestock clubs, and there is evidence that there may be more girls interested in pig and calf clubs than in cooking and baking.—State Journal.
