Nebraskans Picnic At Long Beach, Calif.

(By U. G. KNIGHT)

It may not be generally known in Webster county that Nebraskans in Southern California hold two picnics a year somewhere in Los Angeles county. They are held usually in February and August, the first at Sycamore grove in Los Angeles and the second at Bixby park, in Long Beach.

Last Saturday was the time for the Long Beach affair and it was the best one I ever attended, though I have been going to them for the past 20 years. At this picnic there were more than 30,000 people registered, and all having lived in some part of Nebraska at some time in the past. Think of it; Thirty Thousand former Nebraskans gathered together in a beautiful park of about 30 acres. Each one hunting for former friends and such a shaking of hands and glad cries of delight as there was there.

At noon they all gathered about the long tables with seats at each side in the shade of the semi-tropical trees, with the sound of the breakers only a street away, and partook of many good things to eat, each party furnishing its own refreshments except coffee which is served on the ground and costs ten cents a cup with a nice Nebraska badge thrown in.

The day was ideal—as nearly all are in Long Beach—the thermometer registering plenty cool enough for the men to wear their coats, and the women anything they liked.

After the lunch two eminent Nebraskans entertained the vast throng with speeches. One was Wm. J. Bryan, Junior, who now lives in this city, and the other Wm. H. Thompson, the orator of the Platte, who lives at Grand Island. There were also other good speakers of lesser reputations.

But what I intended telling about was the former Webster Countians I met there, so many of them pioneers in that land.

The first persons I saw when I reached the tree where the Webster county register was hung up, was Jake Miller, his wife and two sons, Harry and Sam. All of the former Red Cloud people will remember the Millers. They were not of the very first settlers in Red Cloud but came in the early seventies and had a harness shop there for many years. Jake was a mixer both in politics and lodge work and very well known throughout the county, the whole family well liked. They now live at San Diego, 120 miles southeast of here.

By the time I had shaken hands all around with these people others came up and it was a continual round of greeting. Joe Warner and wife, who came to Red Cloud in '72 and ran the old Valley house in its prime, now living at Whittier, 20 miles from here, soon appeared. John Winters and his wife, who was a sister of Mrs. Warner, were with them. Henry Rutledge, another early settler near Inavale, now living in Los Angeles, was the next man I saw and I had to have him tell me who he was before I knew.

A pair of men next came up and I recognized them both. They were Jim and Doctor Emigh. Jim used to run a butcher shop in Red Cloud and everyone knew Doc, the dentist. Neither look any older than 20 years ago. They both live in Long Beach now. Curt Evans was next and he lives here, too.

Mrs. Mary Crittenden then came forward to register. Few Red Cloud people will know her by this name but when I say that she was one of the daughters of Rev. Chas. Reilly, one of the first Methodist preachers to hold forth in that city a good many will recall her. I also want to say that her father and mother also live here in Long Beach and enjoy good health although the minister is 92 years of age and, while I do not know the age of his wife, he calls her his "bride of 65 years" so she must be getting along a little, too. My mother, who is now 86 years of age, was also at the picnic and seemed to enjoy it more than most of the younger people there.

William Bailey, brother of Jud of Red Cloud, a pioneer of Guide Rock but now living here, was another of the familiar faces I saw at the picnic. From Riverton there were quite a number and some of them who were there in the "grasshopper year" and the year of the "Easter Blizzard", the first being '73 and the next '74.

John Burgess, formerly of Blue Hill, a harness dealer in that city who ran for County Treasurer against Charlie Robinson the first time the latter was elected, was prominent at the picnic. He lives at Los Angeles now and is a high up official in the Head Camp of the Modern Woodmen and draws down a good salary. John was always a pleasant fellow and is yet.

It took the finest varieties of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos to do it—and the highest order of skill in blending them. Yes, the Chesterfield blend is a secret. It can't be copied.

Some of the newer Red Cloud people were also present. Among them I saw Nate Illingsworth and his wife, who was Miss Flossie Burden. I did not know Nate in my time back there but most people do now I think.

Altogether the Webster county register had, I think, about 50 or 60 names on it, but I did not see the owners of many of them, though most of them were familiar. I saw where two of the Koehlers of Blue Hill had registered and the name of Rollo Shugart, formerly of Guide Rock, whom I well knew many years ago.

One of the curiosities exhibited at the picnic was a copy of the Chief of the year 1872, though I have forgotten the date. It gave an account of the first fourth of July celebration in that city and told of the herd of buffalo which appeared in the ofing during the day and a lot of hunters going forth to get them and one of the buffalos being lassoed by a hunter—caught by the rope around its tail. I did not learn who had this paper yet.

These picnics are a great thing here and I hope that many more of the Webster county people will be able to come to them in the future. Come out and visit the state, all of you. You will like it and be well received.
