Law enforcement is first and primari ly the sworn duty of every one elected to official position-especially those chosen to executive office-and secondly and incidentally the duty of all good and law-abiding citizens. It is admitted by observant and sympathetic people that one of the weak lines in our government is the failure of faithful, just and courageous enforcement of our laws by those elected and paid to perform that duty. This truth holds good in all departments of the state who commend their propos and degrees of government. It is an open question whether this country needs more laws or more honest, earnest and effective enforcement and administration of its present laws. Officials are easily swerved from their duty by fear of loss of business or other equally trivial considerations hence it should be the part of wisdom for the people to nominate and elect those with sufficient stamina and principle to do their duty. And this reminds us that the greatest difficulty is not to enforce the law, but to over come the reluctance and disinclination and often the refusal of the evecutive to do this duty .- McCook Tribune.
