Christmas at the Churches

Christmas eve was celebrated generally in all the churches of the city with appropriate exercises much to the delight of the young and old. This event is the most dearly loved by the children and their hearts are made glad as over and over again they listen to the story of the birth of the Savior.

At the Baptist The Baptist church was nicely decorated for the occasion and a most pleasing program was rendered. The little folks performed their part with much credit to themselves and to those who had their training in charge.

Mrs. A. J. Young gave an excellent reading entitled "To the Poor Farm" and succeeded in reaching the hearts of her hearers. Mrs. Young has unusual ability as a reader and we hope to hear her often. The musical part of the program was well rendered especially the duet by Misses Fulton and Essig while the solos of Ben Williams and Bonnie Essig pleased everyone. At the conclusion of the program the little ones were remembered with gifts and candy.

At the Congregational

At the congregational church the program was given by the children assisted by the choir. There were a number of recitations, songs, and class exercises, all of a very high order.

Every part of the program was carried out in a very creditable manner the boys and girls received much praise for the manner in which they delivered their various parts. The church was tastefully decorated and presented a pleasing appearance. Rev. Crossman was presented with a beautiful silver set by the members of the church. After the program gifts from the teachers and candy was distributed to the children.

At the Christian

The Christian church was filled to its capacity Sunday evening with scholars and parents to listen to the Christmas exercises, after some good music by the quartette and the school. The little folks gave some fine recitations. The drills and marches were finely executed. Much credit is due the teachers for the efforts in training the little folks. After the exercises Santa Claus (for we had a real one fur coat, reindeer and bells.) distributed candies and presents from a log house, which was something new to them, and disappeared wishing them a Merry Christmas and promised to return again next year.

At the Methodist

Sunday evening the Christmas exercises were held at the Methodist church by the Sunday school classes. The church was crowded to its full capacity and many were turned away. An excellent program consisting of solos, duets, quartettes, recitations, dialogues and choruses were rendered by the young folks which was enjoyed by all present. After the programme was completed, Santa Claus called and delivered candy to the children who hoped he would return again next year. The church was nicely decorated for the occasion.
