

CONSUL BARROWS.

Returning to His Old Love, After Five Years.

Some Solid Facts on the Condition of Ireland.

What Will be the End?

The United States Consul at Dublin, Ireland, Mr. Benjamin H. Barrows arrived in the city yesterday. Everywhere he was met as the same old Barrows, but expanded somewhat in his circumferential measurements, so to speak. Some were even charitable enough to allow him had grown better looking, but then he was always ailing that way. Mr. Barrows in appearance has the dignitary's bearing. He is six feet high, broad shouldered, and altogether a splendid specimen of American art. His hair and moustache are jet black, his features regular, and well defined, and a pair of eye glasses make his naturally scholarly look, more intense. He wore a brownish suit, fashionably, and well fitting enough to have been turned out at Ranigo's.

Mr. Barrows is a most interesting talker, and a reporter for THE BEE induced him to converse on things in general in Ireland, which he consented to do with the express stipulation that what he should say must not be considered as coming from the consul, but from plain Mr. Barrows.

After saying that he had left Liverpool on the 12th of last month, and that he had arrived in New York on the 21st, Mr. Barrows went into the Irish question.

"The Land League," said he, "is rapidly becoming disorganized by the arrests that have been, and are being, made. So much so, indeed, that it is now mostly conducted by ladies. Young Brennan was arrested while I was on the ocean. He is a peculiarly capable man, and but twenty-five years old. He was formerly in mercantile pursuits. Of course, in the hour of emergency, there is always one man to do another man's work, but the arrest of Brennan is none the less a severe blow to the Land League."

"Is there any danger of the organization going to pieces?" was asked.

"Not from present appearances. It is to a degree an established system, with branches and sub-managers in every town, parish and barony in Ireland. The league has not lost its force. There is, however, some trouble in getting money."

"What are the demands for money?"

"Principally to support tenants while resisting landlords. Those paying rent, however, are very much greater in number. The number of evictions is by no means in proportion to those paying rent."

"Is the spirit of resistance that underlies this whole business general throughout Ireland?"

"The fact is, Ireland as a nation, is saturated with dissatisfaction. England has for many years legislated for Ireland as if it were a mere colony, whereas the higher truth is, that Ireland has more of the elements of nationality than any other nation on the earth. She has her own language, her own songs, her own literature, poems, and customs, that are over a thousand years old. For England to legislate for a country like that, leaving out her entity, puts a misconception on everything she does for Ireland."

"What are the real causes of this universal dissatisfaction?"

"Well, it has its foundation head in the difference between the poor laws of the two countries. England, very rich, gives support to three per cent of her population, while Ireland, very poor, supports but one and a half per cent. In Ireland no able-bodied man can receive help from the poor funds, while in England, it is the right of every man out of employment to be supported. The latter was made law in 1808, while the former dates from 1838. These tremendous differences should be remedied. I furnished the state department with an exhaustive report of all these matters, and so had occasion to go to the bottom of the subject."

"Do you ascribe England's course towards Ireland to ignorance, or design?"

"The distance between the two countries is but sixty-eight miles, yet the fact is that England understands far away colonies much better. Therefore, I do not think that England purposely ill-treats Ireland. I think Forster meant to do the very best thing for Ireland, but the course of the Irish members in parliament so embittered English sentiment that it is questionable, in my mind, if even a just measure will be enacted for Ireland's grievances. The course of Isaac Butt was the safest, namely, to make all demands on constitutional grounds. It was the safest, the more so because the English people have a very high idea of law and order."

"Have the bishops and priests the same hold on the people as of old?"

"They have a commanding influence in checking violence, but not so much power as of old in whatever pertains to politics. Arch-bishop McHale, now ninety years old, universally known as 'John of Fun,' or the 'Lion of Judah,' wields his old influence. He, of course, lives in the very hot-bed of dissaffection, but the arch-bishop of Dublin, McCabe, a great scholar, is as heartily disliked. He is opposed to the land league. Arch-bishop Croke has a far-reaching power. He is a most capable man every way."

"Does Parnell hold his own with the people?"

"Indeed he does; he is as strong as ever in his mastery over the masses. He is very able. He will lash the people into a frenzy, but never loses his own head. It is surprising to me he has not been arrested. I cannot say why he has not."

"Are you conversant with the Boynton affair?"

"Entirely so. I reported his case to the department. It has been decided that he is not entitled to American citizenship. I visited him often in Kilmainham prison, where all the state prisoners are confined. They report themselves as being handsomely treated."

"What do you think will be the outcome of the whole trouble?" was asked.

"It is the knottiest problem in statecraft I know of, and I do not think the man lives who can predict the outcome. There are wrongs to be righted, concessions to be made, outrages to be punished, and laws to be enacted. Things can not go on as at present. Ireland cannot be left as she is. It would be worth England's while to allow the experiment of self-government for Ireland. For her own self-respect she should permit home rule."

Coming to more pleasant themes the reporter asked Mr. Barrows how he liked life in Dublin.

"During my five years residence there I have found life charming. Dublin is full of brilliant men and women. The cultured Irish gentleman at home has no superior in the world. There is an academic flavor about the city, and one is greatly reminded of Boston. It is a great city for hospitals and the medical fraternity has many bright lights in it. The Irish people are peculiarly musical. I have seen cantatas, oratorios, and grand operas as artistically rendered by amateurs in Dublin as any where in Italian opera. It is a most interesting thing to look over the roll of honor in Trinity College, and read such names as Jonathan Swift, Edmund Burke, Richard Lawrence, the Duke of Wellington, John Philip Curran, Henry Grattan, Henry Flood, Smith O'Brien and the like. The hospitality of the Irish is charming. One does not have to summer and winter with them, as with the English, before being accepted on an equal footing. They take you with open arms at once."

"What is the present status of education among the people at large?"

"Since the establishment of the national schools, the lower classes are coming up rapidly. They are reading and thinking. But take the professions throughout Ireland, the standard is more thorough than anywhere in the world. A man cannot get a profession in a hurry in Ireland."

Mr. Barrows will remain here about two weeks and return to Ireland July 2. During his stay in Ireland Mr. Barrows married, and a fine 'Irish lad,' two and a half years old, is fretting for him over there. Owing to the climate here in summer, Mr. Barrows did not bring his family, but he will come back in the fall and bring them. There is no intimation of his being succeeded, and judging from the public testimonial he received from the citizens of Dublin, there can be no inclination there to see him removed.

John Werner, 1173 Michigan street, Buffalo, says he has been troubled for years with rheumatism of the knee, and until he tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, could not find anything to relieve him. He is now cured and enthusiastic in praise of it.

COOL MINNESOTA.

The Drifts Open and She Reaches Daylight Again.

Nebraska and 'Cool Minnesota' are again neighbors, the Sioux City & Pacific and the Sioux City & St. Paul railroads being open from Omaha to Sioux City and St. Paul. Minnesota enters upon the summer of 1881 with unusual advantages to tourists, who are in search of cool weather, for in addition to her usually delightful climate nature has stored away during the past winter among her hills and around her lakes a quantity of snow and ice which will hardly disappear before the middle of July.

The fishing at Minnetonka and the other superb lakes is said to be better this year than ever and sportsmen are already whipping the clear waters for pickered and bass.

Many Nebraska people have already declared their intention to spend the heated term in Minnesota, but there is no danger that the new and beautiful hotels springing up every year along the lakes will have more guests than they can accommodate.

Maj. O'Bryan, the agent of the Sioux City lines, which take passengers through from Omaha to St. Paul in a few hours, can be addressed at Council Bluffs for information regarding Minnesota hotel accommodations, and railroad fare.
