The Junction had recovered from its spring bath and was bosy sawing and hammering out its new houses. The B. & M. for Plattsmouth was taken and we rode over miles of brand new embankment elevated so as to defy the floods of the future. Cul verts, bridges and trestle work were liberally interspersed along the route so as to prevent damming.

At the "Old Muddy" we found the beautiful bridge ready to receive us, and on the Plattsmouth side we were received and swallowed up the most stupendous cuts to be found anywhere in the west. Clattsmouth has as of old a subdued air. It is not a nervous, excitable town, but has an aldermanic stolidity that speaks of good things and repose.
