STOCKS.

The market this morning opened strong and buoyant on the favorable advices from Washington concerning the president's condition. The general belief that he would probably survive the assassin's bullet, at the opening, leading speculators— who through private sources were kept thoroughly posted as to the condition— were large buyers and prices immediately advanced how per cent. compared with Saturday's closing prices. Subsequently, however, there was c nsiderable pressure to sell, under which there was a reaction of † to 1† per cent: but this was soon recovered. As the day wore on and favorable bulletins of the president's condition c ntinued to be received, there was renewed demand for sto ks of all kinds and later in the day the highest prices of the day were any
