The remains will be buried yesterday at three o'clock from Riene's undertaking rooms. A serious wash-out occurred during the rain on Saturday and Sunday, on the Chicago & Northwestern road, near Boone, Iowa, which has rendered it impossible for trains over that road to reach this city since. No train over that road left this city yesterday. There is also a wash-out on the line of the Rock Island road at some point in Iowa, which stops travel on that road. Storm Damages. The storm which prevailed Saturday night was one of the most violent of this season. It lasted from 9 o'clock until between two and three o'clock Sunday morning. So far as can be learned the only damage done by lightning was the striking of store No. 212 Twelfth street. The lightning ran down the chimney located in the rear of the building and lodged in the earth beneath, completely wrecking the foundation wall of that part of the building. No other damage was done save the serious frightening of the occupants of the second floor. More or less earth was washed from the gutters of streets upon the hill-side. Considerable damage was done in the washing out of trenches of the water works, and all around the city may be seen holes made by horses stepping on places recently excavated and filled.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

The Grim Reaper at Work in Omaha.

Record Embracing Only Twenty-Four Hours.

Within the last two days Omaha has suffered severe losses in the deaths of well known citizens. On Sunday morning Ex-Senator Hitchcock breathed his last; in the afternoon L. C. Huntington expired; Phillip Koch died in the evening, and Mrs. J. A. Morrow passed away yesterday. It is a grim and sorrowful record, and embraces persons whose death the public generally will learn with regret. L. C. HUNTINGTON'S DEATH. L. U. Huntington, one of the old citizens of Omaha, died Sunday afternoon at his residence near Twenty-fourth and Capitol avenue. Mr. Huntington had been suffering for years from asthmatic consumption. For the past nine months he had been almost completely prostrated. On Wednesday there was a radical change for the worse, and his ultimate dissolution became merely a question of time. He lingered on in great suffering until 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, when his death occurred. In 1862 Mr. Huntington removed to this city from Baldwinville, N. Y., his native town. He at once engaged in the hide and leather business in connection with J. S. Sharp & Co., of Chicago. They began business in the old Pioneer block on Farnham street between Eleventh and Twelfth. The firm at that time was known as L. C. Huntington & Co., and business was done under that title until July, 1866, when the firm of Huntington, Sharp & Co. was formed. This firm continued in business until March 1, 1875, when the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Huntington changing his quarters to the Masonic building, where he took his son into partnership, Mr. Sharp remaining at the old stand. Mr. Huntington married Julia C. Sharp, of Baldwinville, N. Y., a sister of Peter H. Sharp, of this city. He stood high as a member of the Presbyterian church. The funeral took place at two o'clock p. m. yesterday, services being conducted at the house by Rev. W. J. Harsha. MRS. MORROW'S DEMISE. A noted career was closed yesterday morning in the death of Mrs. Jennie Morrow, relic of the late J. A. Morrow. The resulting cause of Mrs. Morrow's death was peritonitis. She was taken sick on the 2d of July, with a pain in the region of the abdomen. Nothing much was thought of the matter, and as Mrs. Morrow seldom complained, the illness was probably deemed much less serious than it really was. On Saturday she was taken with violent retching pains and applications of morphia by Dr. McClellan, at whose residence, 1813 Cass street, she was staying, only granted temporary relief. She passed a very restless night and the usual course of treatment brought no permanent relief. She lingered on until 7 o'clock yesterday, when she passed away as quietly as if she had fallen into a general slumber. Mrs. Morrow's history is closely identified with the early days of Nebraska. Not only from her husband's well known daring and many hair-breadth escapes made by him and frequently shared by her, but through her own individuality and intrepidity did she earn for herself a name that will live long in the annals of the state. Mrs. Morrow came to Omaha from Nova Scotia as early as 1850 and in the same year was united in marriage to J. A. Morrow. Very soon after their marriage the couple left for the plains, erecting a house about twelve miles from Cottonwood Station, that afterward became famous as Morrow's rancho. Frontier life in those days was not a bed of roses, but Mrs. Morrow stood nobly by the side of her intrepid husband enduring many hardships until the breaking out of the Sioux Indian war, when they were compelled to give up their rancho and return once more to civilization. With their train containing their worldly effects they arrived safely at Nebraska City, where they remained about two years, finally returning to Omaha, where they lived for some time. A house and lot was purchased by them at Eighteenth and Davenport streets. Mr. Morrow was engaged after that with Mr. W. A. Paxton in furnishing Indians with cattle and in constructing a portion of the Omaha & Northwestern road. Since the death of her husband, a few years ago, Mrs. Morrow has lived very quietly. The recollection of her early days was very vividly impressed upon her memory, but she seldom spoke of her stirring experiences during those arduous times. At the time of her death Mrs. Morrow was only 37 years of age and her friends had hoped for her a much longer lease of life. Her remains will probably be sent on to Washington, Pa., this afternoon, to be laid alongside those of her husband. It was one of her last wishes that this be done. PHILIP KOCH'S DEATH. Philip Koch, another old settler, died suddenly Sunday night at 8:30, at his residence on the southeast corner of Tenth and Castellar streets. For some time he had been suffering from asthma, but it is thought the immediate cause of his death was an apoplectic stroke. On the day previous to his death he had called upon Dr. Grossman and secured some medicine. Sunday afternoon he had a severe cold, but was suffering no pain. He went into the back yard and sitting on a chair was engaged in talking to the servant when he suddenly fell to the earth and expired. Mr. Koch was a Hungarian by

THE STORMS.

Much is said about the character of storms of the present times as though they were different from the storms of a century ago. Taking one series of years with another there has been no material change in storms and other meteorological phenomena, since the Mayflower landed her crew on the rock bound coast of New England. The elements are the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Like causes produce like results. These things all follow immutable laws, and whenever the conditions exist for extraordinary manifestations they will be expected. When the Missouri river is full of water and ice in March and April violent rain storms may be looked for in June and July. Whenever the air is full of vapor, the ground soaked with water and the temperature up in the nineties over a large extent of country, violent thunder storms and cyclones may be expected, for these are conditions under which electricity is developed to its greatest volume and intensity. A series of wet seasons will be followed by a series of dry seasons and vice versa. Cold winters will follow warm ones in series, and hot summers will be followed by cool ones. Seven years usually will average up everything. Statistics prove this. The aborigines of this country have doubtless seen and experienced in the buried and forgotten past all that is seen and experienced in this wonderful year of 1881—cold and heat and floods and storms.
