THE PRESIDENT.

A RESTLESS NIGHT.

WASHINGTON, August 16.—After 3 o'clock this morning the president rested comfortably and seemed entirely free from nausea. At that hour he became a little restless. He was awakened thirty minutes later by a sickness of the stomach. After one or two attempts to vomit the nausea passed away without having given rise to any severe irritation. Mrs. Edison was at the bedside at the time and immediately called Dr. Bliss and Dr. Reynolds, who were on duty, but whose presence was not necessary as the nausea was not again noticed. The president then passed an uncomfortable half hour but finally fell asleep about 4 o'clock, at which time Dr. Bliss said his pulse had gone back and was firm and satisfactory in character. During the night the temperature and respiration were within normal range and there was nothing to indicate that the wind was not doing well.

WHILE THE PRESIDENT WAS AWAKE, between three and four o'clock, he had a slight but natural passage of the bowels. At daylight Mrs. Edison was relieved by Judge Swain, who took his seat at the president's bedside, then asleep. Dr. Reynolds reclined near by, and Dr. Bliss was asleep in an adjoining room. The president's family were all asleep at this time, and James Garfield, Jr., had wrapped himself in a blanket to lay near the door of the sick room. Since the shooting "young Jim," as he is called, has taken to sleeping wherever fancy may dictate. At six o'clock the doctors were still in the room. The president had not needed them since they were called by Mrs. Edison during the night. All through the early morning hours, as they passed to their day's work, looked before the White House and gazed at it, as if its outer appearance might convey to them some indication of the condition of its patient.

KNOTS OF EARLY RINKERS were gathered about the street corners, guessing at the character of the bulletin. There had been last night a strong feeling perceptible throughout the city that the president would not live until morning. The news of the comparative improvement of the late hour had however spread and the morning papers added a gleam of hope, so the end was believed to be not yet, and interest centered on the morning bulletin. At 6:30 a. m., a messenger who called on his way to meet Secretary Lincoln, who was to arrive by the early train, found Mrs. Garfield up and dressed. She appeared to be cheerful and had just seen the doctors. They could, however, tell her nothing more of her husband's condition than that his strength appeared to be increasing. This they judged simply from the character of the pulse, whose beats had, however, not been counted. When Private Secretary Brown reached the White House at 7 a. m., he found the doctors dozing, and General Swain announced that the president was still asleep.

NO FURTHER INFORMATION

could be gleaned during the next hour. Dr. Agnew came down with Attorney-General MacVeagh soon after 7 o'clock, and Dr. Barnes and Woodward followed soon after. To the physicians Dr. Bliss stated, what was not previously given to the public, that the president had several spells of vomiting early in the night. He then rested better until about 3 o'clock. The nausea at this time, mentioned in earlier dispatches, did not repulse the vomiting, but the reaching caused him much pain after 3 o'clock, and after the passage of ready reported an emetia was administered. From this time his rest was good, and at the time of the morning examination his physicians found him somewhat refreshed. The wound was found to be in excellent condition. The temperature and respiration being normal added to the belief of yesterday that the stomach trouble is isolated from the progress of condition of the wound. The physicians are very conservative in their expressions this morning. They say the whole matter rests on their ability to strengthen the stomach, and that nothing but time can tell whether that can be done. Meanwhile are encouraged to hope the difficulty may be successfully met, and the watching will be continuous. Attorney-General MacVeagh takes a gloomy view of the case. He has feared some such complication as the present, but he feels that there is a favorable change this morning. From the tone of his conversation, however, he seems to fear that it will not last. Postmaster General James says he expects an improvement this morning and believes it will continue throughout the day. Other members of the cabinet say they feel slightly reassured, but still deem the situation very grave. Secretary Blaine has not been heard from. The public are divided in opinion over the morning bulletin, a few considering it favorable, but the recurrence of the vomiting during the night is generally looked upon as a bad sign. No excitement in the city this morning. Hopeful people are, however, in the minority.

ALL THE CABINET OFFICERS

have gone to their duties in the departments, but are to be immediately informed if there is any material change for the worse. Blaine started for Washington on receiving last night's news and is expected to reach here to-night. Dr. Hamilton is expected this afternoon according to his previous arrangements with Dr. Agnew. The departure of Dr. Agnew will depend on to-day's developments. Secretary Lincoln, who arrived from New York this morning, says that to him the situation seems to be extremely serious at present. There was a little improvement this morning, but he says it is "very little." All anxiety turns towards the noon bulletin, and on its indications hangs the expectation of the people. If the temperature should be much below the normal point and the pulse remain high the gravity of the situation would be deepened. If, on the other hand, the temperature should remain in the normal range or even if it should increase slightly and the pulse still remain high the situation would not be materially changed. A stationary temperature and an improvement in the pulse would be the best indication. These suggestions are based on a known theory of the physicians. They are very reticent and it is impossible to get any very definite statements from them as to their views at this critical time. The bulletin may be expected about 1 o'clock.

NO NOURISHMENT IN THE NEXT TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.

The critical situation has been explained to the president and he has been told that he will be unable to take any nourishment in the ordinary way for the next 24 hours.

THE CABINET MEETING.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 16.—Shortly after 4 p. m. Attorney-General MacVeagh drove up to the White House. Almost immediately afterwards came Secretary Hunt, and by twenty minutes after 4 all of the members of the cabinet were in the cabinet chamber with the exception of Secretary Blaine, who had not yet arrived. A side table in the department was represented by Acting Secretary Hitt. This circumstance soon became noised abroad and the report was current that the president was dying and the cabinet had been called. The facts in the case are that after the noon bulletin had been issued Attorney-General MacVeagh was greatly worried with the gravity of the situation and suggested that at some time during the afternoon all the cabinet officers get together and ask one of the surgeons to give them a plain statement of the president's prospects. It so happened that the meeting was effected soon after the closing of the departments. Dr. Bliss sat with them about twenty minutes and so impressed them with the belief that the president had a good chance to recover that they came out with a reassurance which was evident in their countenances. Mr. MacVeagh, who has been the most gloomy of all to-day, had a smile on his face and assured the inquirer that the meeting had no official significance whatever. He did not say what might have been the significance had not the surgeon placed the case in so favorable a light before them. Dr. Bliss is anything but reticent. His afternoon, he undoubtedly clings to the idea that a trouble with the president's stomach will yet be surmounted.

THE PRESIDENT'S PHYSICIANS

do not yield in the least their hope that the crisis may yet be passed. Dr. Basil Norris, one of the physicians who was temporarily in attendance in the early days of the case, says that he does not think the case is hopeless. When asked if he thought the president could pull through he said: "He has done so much in this direction already that we can hardly doubt anything." During the latter hours of the afternoon the feeling of depression that had hung over the White House all day was somewhat lifted, though the case could not be determined. The reports from the sick-room up to 6 p. m. were that the president was holding his own. No details as to the irritation of the stomach could be learned. The meagreness of the information was not looked upon as very assuring. The anxiety of the populace had again turned toward the evening bulletin, and before 7 o'clock the usual crowd had begun to gather about the White House bulletin to hear the latest news.

THE IMPRESSION IS GROWING

at the White House that the crisis is at least worked off but an early fatality continues to be the talk of the people throughout the city. There is an earnest hope that such will not be the case. The people in the street find it hard to shake off the foreboding ings that have gained such ground. Now and then muttered curses are heard and if Guiteau should happen to be available he would be torn limb from limb. No definite information as to when Secretary Blaine will arrive is obtainable. Dr. Hamilton started from Seabright at 4 p. m. It is positively asserted that Vice-President Arthur has not been sent for, although he is kept constantly informed of the president's condition. The rumor that the president is afflicted with bad sores is utterly without foundation. Dr. Bliss said, as he entered the White House for the evening examination, that up to the time he left the patient, 5:30 p. m., he was perfectly satisfied with the progress of the case to-day. He spoke of the difficulty in the stomach as if it was easily surmounted. He felt better for some reason than he did in the early part of the day, but he did not say how far the trouble had been surmounted. "We will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," he said.

Mrs. Garfield took a short ride this afternoon to take air. She appeared as calm as ever. Before going out she sat for an hour by the president's side, and resumed the same position for a while on her return.

SYMPATHIES OF THE QUEEN.

The following was received here to-day: LONDON, August 16.—To Drummond: The queen is sorry for the president's relapse, and inquires after him. (Signed) POSNOR.

HOW THE EVENING BULLETIN WAS RECEIVED.

WASHINGTON, August 16.—Secretary Brown's room was literally packed with correspondents and other callers when the bulletin was brought from the doctors' room this evening. Assistant Secretary Pruden read it aloud and left the company to comment on it while copies were being prepared for distribution. Dr. Bliss appeared in their midst and stated that the bulletin was a very conservative one and in general indicated an improvement. He said that the afternoon vomiting referred to was caused by drinking a slight excess of water.

THE FIRST EXPRESSIONS

in regard to the bulletins were in recognition of its own favorable feature. The temperature instead of falling to normal, as it had been feared, had gone up a little but was still within normal range. The high pulse under the circumstances was slightly less alarming, though the continued gravity of the situation was undeniable. On all sides were heard murmurs of disappointment. The slight improvement was indefinite and indicated such slow progress that the impatience of the waiting people was not allayed. The only crumbs of comfort gathered from the evening bulletin was the rise in temperature had postponed if not warded off the "crisis," while little satisfaction was gained from the mere fact that no gain had been lost. On the streets the bulletin caused additional forebodings. The crowd that had collected before the White House slowly walked away in silence.

"HE WILL DIE BEFORE MORNING" was heard on all sides, but there were a few who still cling to the hope that the morning will see him better. At the White House the deepest anxiety prevails, but no immediate danger is apprehended. The dozens of places where bulletins were posted about the city this evening were scenes of deep interest. A stranger happening in could not but judge that the president was dying. At Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street, as a large crowd collected, scarcely a voice of hope could be heard. The general opinion was not "How is he?" but "How long do you think he will last?" His death seems to be accepted as a foregone conclusion. A gentleman of grand physique, addressing those near him, said: "I am confident the president will recover." "What makes you think so?" "Well," continued the speaker, "I had a ball in me ten months and a day. Two of my ribs were broken and the ball crossed my back. I was reduced from 210 to 118 pounds but here I am well." But such speeches were not what people wanted. The people clamored for more official bulletins. They did not seem to consider the impracticability of disturbing the president frequently to get accurate information. All that could be learned from the sick room was bulletined by the local press at the great concern. No such slight improvement relieved them from fear, but I get what comfort I can from the slight improvement." The same question asked of Postmaster General James, he said he was feeling better. He considered the situation grave and more than grave, but there is enough to keep from despondency.

Kirkwood, too, sees a ray of light in the fact that the president is no worse to-night. Secretary Winslow feels very much better. Lincoln thinks the situation too serious for guess work. He is waiting to see how the night is past. Acting Secretary Hitt thinks the prospect better to-night than last night. The more favorable temperature in the evening bulletin has served to partly reassure Private Secretary

Brown. He looks more cheerful but he is cautious of his statement.

THE FEATURE OF THE EVENING

has been the meagreness of the news from the sick room. The doctors remain in their own room and the nurses do not go back and forth so much. The family and cabinet sometimes set an hour or so without seeing or hearing directly from the doctors. After the evening bulletin nothing could be learned from the sick room except that the president had gone to sleep at 9 p. m., and morphia had been administered. In the absence of further information the supposition was accepted that he grew no worse.

TO MINISTER LOWELL.

The following was sent this evening: LOWELL, Minister at London: Since noon there has been a slight rise in temperature. He has vomited but once during the afternoon. Nourishment by emetia has been retained. His pulse is now, at 7 p. m., 120 to 130. His condition on the whole is rather better than yesterday. (Signed) HILL, Acting Sec.

DR. BLISS TALKS.

At 10 p. m. Dr. Bliss came through Secretary Brown's room on the way to his carriage. The reporter asked how the president was then. "No worse. He is asleep now." "You feel as confident as two hours ago?" "Yes, and I feel a little better." "Has any morphia been administered this evening?" "None at all." "The emetia are retained?" "Yes." "How much nourishment is thus administered?" "Enough to keep him going until his stomach regains its strength." "Then you feel it will do so?" "I hope so." "You feel encouraged since the last bulletin was issued?" "I think we all do."

The cabinet all went home soon after 10 o'clock. Mrs. Garfield went to bed before 11 p. m. At that hour the doors were closed. The physicians give assurances that no great danger is to be expected and the mansion assumed a normal state. Blaine is not expected till to-morrow.

THE PRESIDENT'S ATTENDANTS.

Dr. Hamilton arrived at 10 p. m., but did not go to the White House. He and Dr. Agnew are spending the night with Attorney-General MacVeagh. Dr. Bliss sleeps at the White House and Dr. Woodward remains near the president. Dr. Boynton and Col. Rockwell divided the vigil by the bedside. At 11 p. m. the president was asleep and there has been no further disturbance of the stomach.

TUESDAY'S BULLETINS.

OFFICIAL.

WASHINGTON, August 16.—8:40 a. m.—The president was somewhat restless and vomited several times during the early part of the night. Since 3 o'clock this morning he has not vomited and has slept tranquilly most of the time. Nutritious emetia are successfully employed to strengthen him altogether. The symptoms appear less urgent than yesterday afternoon. At present his pulse is 110, temperature 98, respiration 18. (Signed) D. W. BLISS, J. K. BARNES, J. J. WOODWARD, R. REYBURN, D. HAYES AGNEW.

OFFICIAL.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 16.—12:30 p. m.—The president has been tranquil and has not vomited since the last bulletin, but has not rallied from the prostration of yesterday afternoon as much as was hoped. The emetia administered are, however, retained. At present his pulse is 114, temperature 98.2, respiration 18. (Signed) F. H. HAMILTON, D. W. BLISS, J. J. WOODWARD, J. K. BARNES, R. REYBURN.

OFFICIAL.

WASHINGTON, August 16, 1 p. m.—Dr. Bliss says he thinks the president is really better than he was at the same time yesterday, and that he will get well. Mrs. Dr. Edison says the president is better now than he was yesterday and that she thinks he will recover. As Mrs. Dr. Edison was about to go home she was asked by a representative of the National Associated Press what she thought of the condition of the case. She said it was a very serious crisis but that she had hope that the president would recover. His trouble with the stomach, in her opinion, has nothing whatever to do with the condition of the wound, comparatively considered, and she said that the wound is nearly healed. This new trouble she thinks is fully comprehended by all the physicians and all have the same idea about it. The president also comprehends the situation. He has been told that his stomach demands absolute rest, and that no effort will be made to give him nourishment in the regular way. To-day four nutritious emetia will be administered to answer the demands of the case but probably nothing unless water will be put in his stomach. By this the hope is that to-night or to-morrow the stomach may be strong enough to receive something. Mrs. Edison says the president looks better to-day than yesterday. She expects him to recover. Word has been received from Dr. Hamilton that he will be here at 10 o'clock to-night. Dr. Agnew has given no thought as yet as to the possibility of his going home at present. It depends entirely upon the status of the case this afternoon. August 16, 2:10 p. m.—Dr. Reynolds says that the noon bulletin and examination indicate no change whatever. August 16, 2:15 p. m.—The general impression in Washington is that the president will die, but the doctors will not admit that they have given up hope. August 16, 2:25 p. m.—Dr. Bliss admits now that he is disappointed in the president's condition. August 16, 2:50 p. m.—The president's pastor, Rev. Dr. Power, thinks the end is near. He says he sees the shadow of death on the faces of the dwellers at the White House.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 16.—5:30 p. m.—All the members of the cabinet except Secretary Blaine, who has not yet arrived, met at the White House this afternoon to hear the surgeons' statement of the president's condition. Dr. Bliss reassured them to such an extent that the meeting was not officially significant. The cabinet officers were together no more than half an hour. Dr. Bliss says the president has more than an even chance for recovery and that hope should be by no means abandoned. EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 16.—6 p. m.—The only information obtainable from the sick room at this hour is that the president seems to be holding his own. The evening official bulletin will be read about 7 p. m. OFFICIAL. EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 16.—7:45 p. m.—The president's symptoms are still grave, yet he seems to have lost no ground during the day, and his condition on the whole is rather better than yesterday. He has vomited but once during the afternoon. The emetia are retained. At present the pulse is 120, temperature 98.9, respiration 19. [Signed] D. W. BLISS, J. WOODWARD, D. HAYES AGNEW, J. K. BARNES, R. REYBURN. August 16—8 p. m.—There is nothing further from the sick room. August 16—9 p. m.—No morphia has been administered, but the president has gone to sleep. No change is reported in his general condition. August 16—10 p. m.—Dr. Bliss says the president is still asleep. Pulse 114, temperature and respiration about normal. No change since the evening bulletin. August 16—11 p. m.—The president is asleep. Pulse diminishing. No nausea since afternoon. WHITE HOUSE—Midnight.—There are no indications of any material change in the president's condition. No vomiting has been reported. August 17, 1 a. m.—Everything seems quiet in the sick room and no change in the patient has been reported since 12 p. m. Attorney-General MacVeagh does not hesitate to say that he has given up all hopes in the president's case although he says that neither Dr. Bliss nor Dr. Agnew will admit that their opinion is that the president cannot recover.

DR. HAMILTON.

HE WILL NOT EXPRESS HIMSELF.

NEW YORK, August 16.—Dr. Frank H. Hamilton received only the official bulletin this morning. He did not apparently regard them as indicating a crisis. He refused to speak of the president's chances of recovery or of his condition and giving as an excuse the fact that he had no personal observation of the case since Sunday and could not undertake to interpret the president's symptoms as they came to him in accordance with his previous arrangement with Dr. Agnew. He leaves for Washington on the 3:30 last express this afternoon.

Great Sympathy Expressed in London for President Garfield.

Miscellaneous Foreign News of General Interest.

THE LAND BILL.

LONDON, August 16.—The house of lords this evening resumed consideration of the land bill. Lord Salisbury reviewed the situation and said that regarding the clause relating to rent, as it now came from the house of commons, was better than the one adopted by the lords. The bill as it reads has received considerable modification, but the justice of the clause was still apparent. But if Lord Lansdowne persists in his amendment the opposition was bound to support him, but this would not, however, take any action which would send the bill back to the house of commons, as all of the dangerous excesses had been removed. Lord Salisbury said he hoped that the bill would be a great benefit to the Irish tenants and would do no harm to the landlords. Lord Lansdowne consented not to press his amendment and all opposition was virtually ended. After some discussion the amendments of the house of commons were agreed to.

Their trail is marked by murder and the most atrocious outrages. Prof. Snow and Smith, of the Kansas state university, are camped near Water Canon and fears are entertained for their safety, as nothing has been heard of them for several days and large numbers of Apaches are known to be in the immediate vicinity.

FIERCE FIRE.

Western Newspaper Union Office Destroyed.

About 2:30 o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the two story frame building on Thirteenth and Jackson street, occupied by the Western Newspaper Union. The cause of the fire cannot be discovered at this writing but the flames spread with wonderful rapidity and had soon covered the whole building. The fire department met with several accidents. One of their hose carts was broken on the way to the fire and the hose burst badly as they got started. The consequence was that the fire was well under way before the firemen got wall down to business. The fire burned with wonderful rapidity and people living thereabouts began to move their goods to the street. Geo. A. Joslyn, the manager of the concern, was taken out of the building in an unconscious condition overcome by the smoke. The fire was not allowed to extend beyond this single building, although an adjoining structure on Thirteenth street, occupied by the government, was badly damaged. It was an hour before the fire was under control. The loss will be heavy, but its extent cannot be told at this writing.
