

A CONSUMMATE IDYL.

The string that tied the dog fetched loose. The dog came howling on. That misadventure cooked his goose. His cap of gold was gone. Swift for the picket fence he sped. As swallow skin the plain: Two inches scant the dog he led. He never smiled again.

Keep Them Bright.

Keep your face, your heart and your home bright. Don't let the cobwebs gather in the corners of the pretty sitting room; or dust accumulate on the furniture till you can write your name thereon. No matter what is in hand, or how much you have to do, take time at least once a day to tidy your rooms, and gather fresh flowers. You will never regret it, even though at the close of your life you may not possess quite so much of the world's goods as some of your neighbors. It is the best plan by far to enjoy life as it comes and this you can never do in a slovenly, disorderly home.

A Man Shopping.

If you want to torture the average man, send him shopping. More misery cannot be heaped upon him, especially if he has to go to a store where the clerks are ladies and he doesn't know exactly what he wants to buy. A lady clerk has such a way of utterly crushing a man and making him realize his ignorance. We had a little experience the other day. We wanted enough cotton to pack a set of jewelry in a box some two inches square. This cotton we set out to purchase. We had an indefinite idea we could get it at a big variety store on Tremont street, and we drifted around that way. But when we got there and looked in, we didn't have the nerve to enter. It was crowded, and we didn't know which way to turn after we got there, and we felt that we should get lost there, and altogether it was no use. We wouldn't do it. So we went round to Tremont Row, and finally found a store that was comparatively quiet, and there we entered and explained to the best nature the looking woman that we wanted some cotton batting. She said they had it for 15, 20 and 25 cents. We said we'd take the best, and away she went. Soon she returned, followed by a boy with a roll of cotton about the size of a beer cask. This was handed to us. We gazed at it and concluded that it was more than we needed for that jewelry box. We said to the lady: "Madam, you are mistaken. We don't desire to start a wholesale cotton mart, we don't desire to get up a corner in cotton, we don't run a burlesque troupe. What we want is about enough cotton to fill a box two inches square." Several lady customers overheard us, and looked at us and the roll of cotton. And then they kind of winked, and the clerk looked at us with a sneer, and of contemptuous pity that was worse than the laughter of the customers. We finally got the cotton and fled from the store, but we had got to feeling so annoyed and mortified that we didn't get over it all day. And we rather enjoy shopping for a man.

Home Love.

Home love is the best love. The love that you bore to the sweetest you will ever have on earth. You, who are so anxious to escape from the home nest, pause a moment and remember this is so. It is right that the hour should come when you, in your turn, should become a wife and mother and give the best love to others; but that will be just it. Nobody—not a lover, not a husband—will ever be so tender or so true as your mother or your father. Never again, after strangers have broken the beautiful bond, will there be anything so sweet as the little circle of mother, father and children, where you were cherished, protected and kept from harm. You may not know it now, but you will know it some day. Whomsoever you may marry, true and good though he may be, after a while you are over and the honeymoon has waned, give you only what you deserve of love and sympathy—and usually much less; never more. You must watch and be wary, lest you lose that love which came in through the eyes because the one who looked thought you beautiful. But those who bore you, who loved you when you were that dreadful little object, a small baby, and thought you exquisitely beautiful and wonderful by brilliant—they do not care for faces that are fairer and finer than those that are more beautiful than yours. You are their very own, and so better to them always than others.

Petty Worries.

What a blessed thing it is that we can forget. To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight. If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them it would be of great benefit. You are always a thing to annoy you and just as you allow a fly to settle on you and plague you, and you lose your temper—or rather get it, for when men are surcharged with temper they are said to have lost it,—and you justly yourself for being thrown out of your balance by causes which you do not trace out. But if you would see what it was that threw you off your balance before breakfast, and put it down in a little book, and follow it up and out and ascertain what becomes of it, you would see what a fool you were in the matter. The art of forgetting is a blessed art, but the art of overlooking is quite as important. And if we should take time to write down the original progress and outcome of a few of our troubles, it would make us so ashamed of the fuss we make over them that we should be glad to drop such things and bury them at once in eternal forgetfulness. Let us be too short to be worn out by petty worries, frettings, hatred and vexation.

Lansing a Wild-Chat.

A pleasant drive of twenty-eight miles brought us to the famous Blind Creek ranch, where the great heathen missionary, the Rev. John Glenn, is resident pastor and distributor of food, raiment and German mineral water to the footsore and weary and the thirsty. Two miles from the person's range of the Doctor "takes hold." After crossing this we observed in the distance a solitary horseman, who on closer examination proved to be one of the Doctor's henchmen. While talking cow to him a tremendous wildcat, fully four feet long, jumped up in front of us and started for the brush, but the rovels were already in the banks of Charles horse, and at a breakneck speed, the stars cut their way through and certain coils above his head went pursued and pursued. When within twenty-five feet of his catch the larva was thrown, and, unrolling like the weird chain of a magician, landed the fatal noose around London's neck. Never was a wildcat of any description in a tighter embrace; horse at full run, the rope fastened to the horn of the saddle, and the game making unwilling jumps of twenty to thirty feet. This, however, only lasted a few hundred feet, when the other left to mourn the embittered past, pleading from the far spirit-land for that forgiveness earth cannot accord.

Every Day Thoughts.

Ah, how sad and vain a thing is regret. When too late, some past wrong-doing is burden the memory, and the bitter truth we tried to veil, even from our own hearts, is revealed in all its unattractiveness. Who is not to repent some slight, thoughtless omission of duty or kindness toward those whom they love? What even are regret compared with the anguish of feeling of having parted from a friend—perhaps from our best beloved—with unkind and cruel words? It may have been those words were uttered carelessly, lightly, as the wild and wanton breeze sweeps by; but they leave a pain, as the breeze leaves some scattered rose-leaves to mark its track. Or it may have been they were purposely spoken, prompted by pride and passion and imagined wrong. Such has been an episode in many a life. The cause was thrown, and, unrolling like the weird chain of a magician, landed the fatal noose around London's neck. Never was a wildcat of any description in a tighter embrace; horse at full run, the rope fastened to the horn of the saddle, and the game making unwilling jumps of twenty to thirty feet. This, however, only lasted a few hundred feet, when the other left to mourn the embittered past, pleading from the far spirit-land for that forgiveness earth cannot accord.

HAVESVILLE, O., Feb. 11, 1880.

I am very glad to say I have tried Hop Bitters, and never took anything that did me as much good. I only took two bottles and I would not take $100 for the good they did me. I recommend them to my patients, and get the best results from their use.

Drying Tomatoes.

In Italy an extensive business is carried on in drying tomatoes to use during those portions of the year when the ripe fruit can not be obtained. The tomatoes are raised for the most part between rows of grape-vines, so that the land for their culture costs nothing. Sometimes the tomato vines are trained on the lower bars of a trellis to which the grapes are attached. The ripetomatoes are allowed to remain on the branches till they are quite ripe, when they are picked and pressed in bags made of coarse cloth, which allows the pulp to pass through, but retains the seed and skins. This pulp is then thinly spread out on cloths, boards, or shallow dishes, and exposed to the sun to dry. When it has become quite dry, it is broken up fine or ground and put into boxes or bags and sent to market. A large part of it is used for making soups, but considerable of it is employed as we do the tomatoes that are preserved in tin or glass cans. It is soaked for a few hours in warm water and then cooked in the ordinary manner. Large quantities are wanted for home consumption and considerable is exported. This would seem to be a profitable industry to engage in in this country. There is a great prospect in raising dried tomatoes, as many of them are poisonous or at least unwholesome. The acid juice they contain unites with the solder of the tin cans and forms a compound that often causes severe sickness. The pulp of tomato could be dried to good advantage in any of the styles of apparatus employed for drying apples, peaches, and small fruits.

EASILY PROVEN.—It is easily proven that malarial fevers, constipation, torpidity of the liver and kidneys, general debility, nervousness, and neuralgic ailments yield readily to this great disease conqueror, Hop Bitters. It repairs the ravages of disease by converting the food into rich blood, and it gives new life and vigor to the aged and infirm always.

Destroying Large Weeds. This is an excellent season for weeds if for no other kind of vegetation. Many persons are troubled with very large weeds—such as burdocks and mulleins. They can not be eradicated by an ordinary treatment. If simply cut off with the hoe they will spring up again and make a large growth in a few weeks. The best instrument to employ in destroying them is a sharp spade. It should be thrust into the ground so that it will cut off the stalk some inches below the crown. It is well to throw a small handful of salt in the space that was occupied by the stalk. The stalks should be removed to some convenient piece of ground where they can be dried and then burned. If allowed to remain where they grew, the seed will grow out again in time, germinate. The seeds of large weeds possess great vitality and will ordinarily remain in the soil all winter without injury. The seeds of many kinds of weeds are sufficiently mature to germinate when the plants on which they grew present none of the appearance of ripeness. On this account farmers and gardeners are often deceived in the appearance of weeds, as they do not resort to the proper means to destroy them. If they are allowed to get possession of land they should be cut before blossoms appear so as to prevent their propagation by means of seeds. They should be raked or thrown into piles while they are green, and when they become dry, they should be covered with a thin coating of earth. In some cases, if they are not destroyed in time their seeds will find their way to every part of the farm or garden.

Beware of poisonous plants and shrubs. We mention a few of the most common that should not be touched: The two varieties of poison ivy, sometimes called poison-vine and poison oak, one of which grows erect as a shrub from two to five feet high, and the other as a vine from eight to thirty feet high. Poison sumac, also known as poison elder and swamp dog-wood, growing as a shrub or small tree from ten to eighteen feet high, generally in moist places; the foliage is light green, and the bark is a yellowish white. It is placed in the mouth as the wild carrot, wild parsnip, cowbane, hemlock-parsnip, water hemlock (the roots of which are deadly poison), and poison henlock (also a virulent poison); the root, leaves and berries of the buck-thorn, which is a violent and dangerous purgative, frequently producing dangerous symptoms.

The only safe way to avoid the unpleasant or dangerous effects is to scrupulously refrain from handling or chewing any plant, or any part of it, unless the plant is well known to you and known to be innocuous.

As ivy is one of the most common poisonous following preventive may be found efficacious: If you have been in contact with it, as soon as possible thereafter sponge yourself thoroughly all over with strong vinegar or alcohol, with salt and water, or with kerosene. Then wash off with strong soap-suds.

Cure for the affection: When it breaks out scratch it till the surface is highly irritated then apply a strong solution of oxalic acid. This is very severe, but a sure application will be sufficient.

The Cause of Dew. If dew fell it would fall for the same reason that rain falls; but dew does not fall. It is simply a deposit of moisture always contained in the air to a greater or less degree, and which when there is enough of it, will always form on any cold body exposed to the moist air, in precisely the same way that a cold bottle or stone, taken from a cold cellar and suddenly exposed in the shade to the moist, warm summer air, will become wet. This is not sweating, nor does this moisture come out of the bottle or stone as many people believe, but from the air. It is for the same reason that moisture will condense against the window-pane when the air is cold outside, and the pane is inside, or when there is freezing while its deposits form crystal ice, which we so often admire in winter. When the weather is cool enough the moisture will even freeze plants and grass, and then we call it hoar frost; if it does not freeze it is simply dew. The only point left to be explained is why does the ground become so cool during the night, so much cooler than the air above, as to cause the latter to deposit its moisture. This was for many years a vexed problem till Wells first suggested the radiation theory of heat, which takes place from the surface of the earth through the clear atmosphere into the space above, and so causes the surface to become much cooler than the air itself. He demonstrated this by means of thermometers placed at different heights, and also by the fact that dew is only deposited on cloudless nights. When there are clouds they reflect the heat or prevent their being kept from cooling, so dew is deposited.
