Delegate Maginnis Explains the Purposes of the Impending Trip.

The Senate Committee's Work—Arrangements for Placing the Indians on Smaller Reservations.

Chicago News, August 6th.

A clear and thorough explanation of the purposes and work of the United States senatorial committee, appointed to investigate the condition of various tribes, was given yesterday by a reporter by Delegate Maginnis, of Montana, who appears to be a kind of guide to the politicians and others who are now at the Grand Pacific.

"The Indians in Montana," he said, "the Crows, Pigeons, Assinaboines, and others—occupy immense reservations in different parts of the territory. Those reservations were laid out for them when hunting and fishing were their sole means of support, and buffalo and game were plentiful. Now the game has disappeared. They can no longer make a living by hunting, and the country is needed for settlement. The immense reserves are of no use to the Indians who own them. Some of them are starving on the vast possessions which they are unable to utilize, and it is the intention of the government to place them on smaller reservations, though of ample size for agriculture and for grazing their flocks of cattle, and to throw the remainder of the reservation open to settlement and sale. If these portions of Indian reservations are ceded to the government, it will pay the Indians sufficient annuities to keep them from starving, to maintain them, and to provide them with stock and agricultural implements, so that they may be started on the road to civilization, and made self-sustaining, if possible, in a series of years.

"This is the general plan of this commission. The original duty devolving upon the commission was to investigate the treaties made by the government with certain bands of Sioux Indians for the cession of their reservation in Dakota last fall. This cession was made to a commission appointed by Secretary Teller under an act of congress, and the committee want to satisfy themselves and the senate that the Indians are generally satisfied with those treaties, and to get such other facts as will guide the judgment of the senate in ratifying these.

"All the members of the commission, as appointed, are here, except Senator Morgan, of Alabama, and Haskell, of Kansas. The latter is at Waukegan Springs, Wis., too ill to go on the long journey intended. Senator Morgan will be on hand to-morrow, and then the committee will hold a formal business meeting.

"The committee will probably leave on Friday for St. Paul, where they will confer with Gen. Terry, commander of the department of Dakota, get his views on the situation, and then proceed to the Crow reservation in Montana, select land for the Crows near Fort Custer, in the Big Horn valley, near the place where Custer was killed, for a final reservation of the Crows, and see if they wish all the rest of the reservation that is not available for them. From there the committee will go to Helena, M. T., where they will hold a formal meeting to consult and hear the Indian agents and people from various parts of the territory who desire to give their views on the matter. A sub-committee will then be appointed to visit the Flatheads. Senators Morgan and Cameron will probably go to the Blackfeet, the Gros Ventres, and the Assinaboines. Senator Dawes and the Sioux will return to Bismark, D. T., visit the Sioux chief on the Missouri river, and then proceed over to Red Cloud and Pine Ridge agencies. Senator Vest will go on with the presidential party and visit the Waukegan agency in Wyoming, where the Indians, who have a reservation there, have some grievances which are being investigated. Senator Vest will rejoin the commission at Helena, and he and myself will go to the Flatheads, who are the most remote tribes to be visited in this section. Re-assembling at Washington, the sub-committees will make a full report to congress.

A competent railroad authority said to the reporter: "The movement to enable the Indians to receive direct governmental assistance for giving up a portion of their reservations is not in the interest of any railroad corporations extending into that country, but of bona fide settlers, or parties who are desirous of becoming such. The best grazing and agricultural land to be found in northern Wyoming, western Dakota, and eastern Montana are involved in some form or other in the obligations of the government to the various Indian tribes there located, and the occupation for the purpose of cultivation or utilization is impossible until some amicable arrangement is made with the Indians. The questions arising before this commission are similar to those bearing on the opening up of Indian territory and now being agitated. The government protects the Indian territory against invasion and settlement by white people. The government also protects, though in a lesser degree because of the lesser interest involved, the tribes of the northwest against trespass by settlers, as well as by railway and other corporations. The St. Paul and the Northern Pacific railroads, which have made surveys for track extensions through the territory west of the Missouri river to the Rocky mountains, were compelled to secure the consent of the Indians' chief and the councils before their surveying parties were permitted to proceed. The opening in the northwest may precipitate the opening also of the Indian territory.

A DOMESTIC SKETCH.

Husband and Wife Recapitulating Each Other's Faults.

Exchange. After having been married some weeks it came into the head of a young husband one Sunday when he had but little to occupy his mind, to suggest to his wife that each should plainly and honestly state the faults that each had discovered in the other since they had been man and wife. After some hesitation the wife agreed to the proposition, but stipulated that the rehearsal should be made in all sincerity, and with an honest view to the bettering of each other, as otherwise it would be of no use to speak of the faults to which marriage had opened their eyes. The husband was of the same mind, and his wife asked him to begin. He was somewhat reluctant, but his wife insisted that he was first to propose the matter, and as he was the head of the house, it was his place to take the lead. Thus urged, he began the recital.

I observed in you after we began keeping house, that you a good deal neglected the tinware. My mother always took great pride in her tinware, and kept it as bright as a dollar. "I am glad you have mentioned it, dear," said the wife, blushing a little; "whereafter you shall see no spot on cup or pan. I pray proceed."

"I have also observed," said the husband, "that you use your dishrag a long time without washing them, and finally throw them away. Now, when at home, I remember that my mother always used to wash out her dishrags when she was done using them, and then hung them up where they could dry ready for the next time she would need them."

Blushing, as before, the young wife promised to amend this fault. The husband continued with a most formidable list of similar faults, many more than he had space to enumerate, when his wife, who had been silent, could think of nothing more worthy of mention. "Now, my dear," said he, "you begin and tell me all the faults you have discovered in me since we have been married."

The wife sat in silence. Her face flushed to the temples and a great lump came in her throat, which she seemed to be striving hard to swallow. "Proceed, my dear; tell me all the faults you have discovered in me; spare none."

Arising suddenly from her seat the little wife burst into tears, and throwing both arms about her husband's neck, cried: "My dear husband, you have not a fault in the world. If you have one my eyes have been so blinded by my love for you that so long as we have been married I never once observed. In my eyes you are perfect, and all that you seem to be doing in the best manner and just what should be done."

"But, my dear," said the husband, his face reddening and his voice growing husky with emotion, "just think, I have gone and found all manner of fault with you. Do tell me some of my faults; I know I have many, and you seem to be doing in the best manner and just what should be done."

"Indeed, husband, it is as I tell you; you have not a single fault that I can see. Whatever you do seems right in my eyes, and now that I know what a good-for-nothing little wretch I am, I shall at once begin the work of reform, and try to make myself worthy of you."

"Nonsense, my dear; you know that sometimes I go away and leave you without any wood out, I stay down town when I ought to be at home I spend money for drink and cigars when I ought to bring it home to you."

"No, you don't," cried his wife; "you do nothing of the kind. I like to see you enjoy yourself; I should be unhappy were you to do otherwise than just exactly as you do."

"God bless you little wife," cried the now subjugated husband, "from this moment you have not a fault in the world. Indeed, you never had a fault; I was joking, don't remember a word I said. And he kissed away the tears that still trembled in the little woman's eyes. Never again did the husband scrutinize the tinware nor examine the dishrag—never so much as mentioned one of the faults he had enumerated—but soon after the neighbor women were wont to say: "It is wonderful how neat Mrs. Jones keeps everything about her house. Her tinware is as bright as a new dollar, and I do believe she not only washes but irons her dishrags." And the neighbor women were heard to say: "What a steady fellow Jones has got to be of late; he don't spend a dime more he used to spend dollars, and can never be kept from home half an hour when he is not at work. He seems to worship that wife of his."
