A LITTLE HEROINE. The Details of Lily Chantry's Miraculous Escape From Death.

She Is Rapidly Recovering From Her Injuries.

A few days ago THE BEE gave a brief account of the miraculous escape from death of a little girl, who, in trying to cross the railway bridge near Malvern, on the Wabash road, was overtaken by a special train, and knocked off the bridge into the creek.

Lily is now recovering rapidly from the injuries she received by the accident. By some strange, almost miraculous, escape, she had no bones broken, the injuries consisting of cuts and bruises. She has been visited by scores of friends and citizens, who have listened to the story of her escape with much interest, and who have been greatly concerned in her recovery.

The details of her adventure, as narrated by her to The Leader, are in substance as follows:

She was returning from school at noon, as usual, but getting a little frightened at some stock on the wagon road, she concluded to go across the railway bridge, which, with the trestle work, is 405 feet in length. She sought the watchman to find out what time the next train would cross the bridge, and not finding him, after some hesitation, concluded to go over.

When about two-thirds of the way over she was startled by the shrill whistle of an incoming train. It was an "extra," bearing the belated H. & S. coaches from Shenandoah to Council Bluffs. Lily threw up her hands with an exclamation of horror, she increased her gait to a run, thinking she could get to the end of the bridge before the train reached it. But, alas, her foot caught on one of the ties and she was thrown upon her hands, only to see the monster engine dash on to the bridge only a few feet away.

With remarkable presence of mind she crawled to the outer edge of the bridge and clasped her arms around the 2x4 plank running parallel with the rail. At this part of the bridge the ties are quite short, there being not over 18 inches of space between the rail and the plank referred to. Crowding herself into this small space in far less time than it takes to tell it, Lily awaited the result. As the engine thundered by the cow-catcher scraped the child's head, inflicting great pain, but she still clung bravely to her slight hold on life. Thinking the train had passed, she raised her head the least bit, when the rear step of next to the last car struck her a cruel blow, knocking her off the bridge into the creek 37 feet below.

In the descent she struck the bank of the stream, which greatly lessened the force of the fall. A small spring oozing from the bank had melted the ice away for a few feet, and into this mud and water she finally landed. Although badly cut, bruised and frightened, she never for a moment lost her rare presence of mind, and the knock and fall together did not produce unconsciousness. She kept herself from sliding into the main water of the stream by holding to a projecting bush until help reached her. This is the story, substantially, as she relates it. As soon as the engineer saw the child on the track he reversed the engine, although it is claimed she was "smoking fifty miles an hour." When he saw the train could not be checked in time, he motioned to Lily to lie flat. In his efforts to reach the little girl after the train crossed the bridge, the engineer sustained some ugly scratches and severe bruises by a fall.

QUEEN OF ENTERPRISE.

Remarkable Growth and Future Promise of Red Oak.

As Seen by a Bee News Gatherer.

RED OAK, Ia., November 21.—The itinerant news-gatherer in search of news, live towns, and the wherewith to keep a metropolitan daily paper moving on and its readers posted as to the magnitude of the great state of Iowa, cannot overlook this city—"the Queen of Nishnabotany valley."

Red Oak is the county seat of Montgomery county, contains over 4,000 inhabitants, and is situated on the main line of the popular C. B. & Q. railway, fifty miles east of Council Bluffs. A branch from the main line runs north to Griswold, connecting with the Rock Island at that point, and a branch south to Nebraska City.

The place commenced its substantial growth about ten years since, and will continue, with fair promise of becoming second to no other of the beautiful southwestern Iowa cities. The town is beautifully laid off with much regularity and order, and there are a goodly number of elegant and large brick blocks, all looking as new "daddy dollar."

The city has a complete system of water-works (the Perkins' direct pressure), telephone exchange, street car line, and gas works. The telephone wires extend all over the city, connecting with all the surrounding towns and with Council Bluffs and Omaha.

The public schools of the place are of the highest standard and well cared for. Three graded buildings in different localities furnish convenient and excellent facilities for the attendance of the schools and the general intelligence of the populace indicate that they are taking advantage of the educational facilities at their disposal. The fraternal societies are well represented here, both in the number of different orders and the memberships in each. It has a board of trade, three national banks, two first-class hotels—the Central and the Judkins houses, each well patronized, and a credit to the enterprising city in which they are located; one pork packing house, three weekly newspapers, The Record, The People's Telephone and The Express, each of which is well patronized, and each is doing much to push matters to the front.

The Express has been published for nearly sixteen years as a weekly, but will likely soon launch out into the daily field. Before concluding this brief review I must not fail to mention the wholesale grocery firm of Moriarty Bros. & Co., who have been doing a successful wholesaling in this line for over twenty-two years past. Their trade is now extensive in this part of Iowa, and it is rapidly increasing. Of the three different banking institutions here, I only find time to notice the Valley National, the pioneer bank of Montgomery county; this institution has been doing a banking business for the past eleven years.

Warren H. Kinkade is cashier and one of the stockholders, and also interested in a banking institution at Elliott. Your scribe has not the time to speak further in detail of the business interests of the place, but will leave it for the present in the hands of one of the best local correspondents who will, I trust, fully and fairly represent Red Oak's interests in your columns.

Handsome Picture Cards. Messrs. C. B. Jacquemin & Co., are distributing some of the handsomest steel plate engraved picture cards published. The better part is the notice attached by which they inform the public of the reduction in the prices of their goods, and as the holiday season is approaching it will pay all to give them a call.

The Thief of Time. A young man named A. McIntosh, from near Creston, worked for H. H. Woodrow a few days last week, but upon spraining his wrist he quit work and left. About the same time a watch belonging to a member of the family disappeared. Marshal Talbot arrested the young man a day or two afterward for attempting to tap the till at Kemple's restaurant, while making a purchase of that gentleman. Mr. Kemple declined to file an information against McIntosh, however, and the Marshal, who suspected him of stealing the watch from Mr. Woodrow's residence. On the way out he acknowledged stealing the watch, but said he had sold it in Council Bluffs. He had $9.50 which he agreed to put up for the watch and it was accepted. On their return to town, however, he told the marshal that he sold the watch to a party in Glenwood, and gave the purchaser's name. The marshal went to Glenwood, secured the watch, and his self filed an information against young McIntosh before Esq. Barnes. The Squire fined him $10 and costs, and the young man's mother, who had arrived in the meantime, took him home with her. The watch was returned to its owner; the Glenwood man got his money and McIntosh alone is the loser by his rashness. —[Malvern Leader.
