

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS
WILL CURE HEADACHE
INDIGESTION
BILIOUSNESS
DYSPEPSIA
NERVOUS PROSTRATION MALARIA
CHILLS AND FEVERS
TIRED FEELING
GENERAL DEBILITY
PAIN IN THE BACK & SIDES
IMPURE BLOOD
CONSTIPATION
FEMALE INFIRMITIES
RHEUMATISM NEURALGIA
KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS
The Genuine has Trade Mark and crossed Red Lines on wrapper.
TAKE NO OTHER.

COOKED OAK STOVE
THE BEST OF ALL
and Distributed in the BROAD CLAIM, WRIGHT VERY BEST OPERATING, QUICKEST SELLING AND MOST PERFECT COOKING STOVE

Saver offered to the public.
Mendelssohn & Fisher ARCHITECTS
Rooms 28 and 29 Omaha Natl. Bank Block

J. F. SEGER, MANUFACTURER OF HARNESS & SADDLES
All size of the most complete stocks of Harness, Saddles, Whips, Brushes, Horse Clothing, etc., hand. 119 N. 16th St., Bet. Dodge and Capital

PRIVATE A COUNCIL OF WAR
I think I was in a council of war once. Maybe it was in the early days of the fall of 1863 when General Thomas L. Crittenden's command was at Calhoun on Green river, Kentucky, and after the battle of Sacramento in that neighborhood. There was a rumor brought in that Forrest with a large force was moving on Calhoun with a view to the capture of Gen. Crittenden's command, the troops were mostly composed of raw recruits, badly armed, equipped, and the cavalry indifferently mounted. The officers and men were brave, and on many a battle field thereafter proved their soldierly qualities. The council was an impromptu affair to take into consideration the gravity of the situation in the event that Forrest should advance in force on the command. It was held in a large room with an old-fashioned fireplace taking in almost all of one side. General Crittenden sat next to me, close by the fireplace, and the officers clustered themselves as they could from the limited accommodation of the room. The condition of each regiment and company was talked over. The words buck and ball, Belgian rifle, worthless pistols, etc., were frequently used. There had been no opportunity to drill the men because of the frequent rains and the resulting mud. Calhoun was at that time the muddest place I saw during the war. I gave my opinion of the condition in which the postoffice would be found in event that Forrest should come. Gen. Crittenden gave respectful but silent attention to all that was said. As the clock struck from his seat, put both hands in his pantaloons pockets and strode across the room, saying, "Gentlemen, all I have to say on this subject is that if Forrest or any other confederate comes we must go in and trust to our personal courage to win the fight." The federal government owed much to Gen. Crittenden for the promptness with which he espoused the cause of the Union, and thereby greatly contributed to save the state of Kentucky to it.

ROYAL HAVANA LOTTERY
A GOVERNMENT INSTITUTION.
Drawn at Havana Cuba, Every 12 to 14 Days.

THE BABY
James Medical Institute
Chartered by the State of Illinois
Special Practice, Seminal Weakness, Night Dreams, Pimples on the Face, Lost Manhood, positive cure. There is no other medicine. The appropriate remedy is at once used in each case. Consultations, personal or by letter, sacredly confidential. Medicines sent by Mail or Express. No name on package to indicate contents or sender. Address DR. JAMES M., 204 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN PACKET COMPANY.
Direct Line for England, France and Germany.
The steamships of this well known line are built of iron, in water-tight compartments, and are furnished with every requisite to make the passage both safe and agreeable. They carry the United States and European mails, and leave New York, Tuesday and Saturday for Plymouth (LONDON) Cherbourg, (PARIS) and Hamburg (HAMBURG). Rates: Home passage from Hamburg $10, to Hamburg $10; round trip $20. First Cabin, $25, $35 and $75. Henry Funds Mark Hansen, P. E. Moore, M. Toll, Agents in Omaha, Greenwood. Subsequent Agents in Council Bluffs, C. B. RICHARD & CO., Gen. Pass. Agts., St. Paul, Minn., N. Y. Chas. Koenig & Co., General Western Agents, 170 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

The Hall Type Writer
In the simplest, best and most complete typewriter made. Has interchangeable type plates, has few parts and prints from the face of the type, instead of through the inked ribbon. Price only $40. Send for descriptive circulars.
GEO. J. PAUL, Agent, 1144-16th St., P. O. Box 714, Omaha, Neb.

Manhood Restored
Remedy for a Victim of youthful indiscretion
Manhood, no matter how lost, can be restored. The only remedy is at once used in each case. Consultations, personal or by letter, sacredly confidential. Medicines sent by Mail or Express. No name on package to indicate contents or sender. Address DR. JAMES M., 204 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

CONSUMPTION.
A safe and reliable remedy for the above disease. It is a combination of the most powerful and most valuable ingredients known to medicine. It is a safe and reliable remedy for the above disease. It is a combination of the most powerful and most valuable ingredients known to medicine.

OLD TECUMSEH.
Leaves from Colonel Markland's War Memories--Joke Played on General Sherman.

How General Howard and Others Forced Him to Take Seidlitz Powder.

Description of a Council of War--Scenes at the Close of Sherman's March to the Sea.

How Old Tecumseh Looked--How the Soldiers Received Their Mail--Affecting Scenes.

Correspondence Cleveland Leader.

I am able to give the readers of the Leader some more extracts this morning from the manuscript notes of Col. A. H. Markland, the head of the mail service during the war.

The first relates how Gen. Howard unwittingly COMPELLED GEN. SHERMAN TO TAKE A SEIDLITZ POWDER when he wanted rather a drink of old bourbon whiskey. "When Gen. Sherman's army was at Goldsboro, N. C., Gen. Sherman made a visit to the headquarters of Gen. Howard. While there Gen. Sherman felt the need of a small draught of whiskey to drive off the malarial effects of the climate and to give the officers of the army some more of the rigidity of temperance proclivities, and were strict in their respect for them. Gen. Sherman knew there was no whiskey in General Howard's quarters, and therefore did not mention his wants to General Howard. Presently Dr. John Moore, the medical director, came in, and after a little conversation with Gen. Sherman gave him the wink and said, "Doctor, have you a seidlitz powder in your quarters?" The doctor answered that he had. General Howard spoke up and said: "General Sherman, it is not necessary to go to the doctor's quarters. I have plenty of seidlitz powders here, and good ones, too. I will get you one." If there was anything in General Howard's quarters that General Sherman did not want it was a seidlitz powder, and therefore he said to General Howard: "Never mind, General. Give yourself no trouble." Howard was then getting the glasses of water ready. "I will be going by Moore's quarters after awhile," Dr. Moore was a great and quicky took in the situation and became a party to a joke on General Sherman. He said to General Sherman: "By the way, general, I don't think I have a seidlitz powder in my quarters and you had better take the one General Howard had." By this time General Sherman had the powder all ready for use and handed the glass to General Sherman. Rather than offend Howard by saying he meant whiskey he drank the foaming stuff down to his disgust, to the satisfaction of General Howard and to the amusement of the staff officers.

My second extract describes A COUNCIL OF WAR.

"I think I was in a council of war once. Maybe it was in the early days of the fall of 1863 when General Thomas L. Crittenden's command was at Calhoun on Green river, Kentucky, and after the battle of Sacramento in that neighborhood. There was a rumor brought in that Forrest with a large force was moving on Calhoun with a view to the capture of Gen. Crittenden's command, the troops were mostly composed of raw recruits, badly armed, equipped, and the cavalry indifferently mounted. The officers and men were brave, and on many a battle field thereafter proved their soldierly qualities. The council was an impromptu affair to take into consideration the gravity of the situation in the event that Forrest should advance in force on the command. It was held in a large room with an old-fashioned fireplace taking in almost all of one side. General Crittenden sat next to me, close by the fireplace, and the officers clustered themselves as they could from the limited accommodation of the room. The condition of each regiment and company was talked over. The words buck and ball, Belgian rifle, worthless pistols, etc., were frequently used. There had been no opportunity to drill the men because of the frequent rains and the resulting mud. Calhoun was at that time the muddest place I saw during the war. I gave my opinion of the condition in which the postoffice would be found in event that Forrest should come. Gen. Crittenden gave respectful but silent attention to all that was said. As the clock struck from his seat, put both hands in his pantaloons pockets and strode across the room, saying, "Gentlemen, all I have to say on this subject is that if Forrest or any other confederate comes we must go in and trust to our personal courage to win the fight." The federal government owed much to Gen. Crittenden for the promptness with which he espoused the cause of the Union, and thereby greatly contributed to save the state of Kentucky to it.

SCENES AT THE CLOSE OF SHERMAN'S MARCH.

My third extract I take from that portion relating to Col. Markland's meeting with Gen. Sherman as he came to the sea coast at the close of that famous march to the sea. Col. Markland had been sent by Gen. Grant with the mail for Sherman's army in a small steamer to coast along the South Carolina shore, to ascertain where Sherman would come out and be there on hand to give his tired soldiers their mail which he had not had for months. Colonel Markland's boat was on the island which he had met Admiral Dahlgren's flagship and had had a consultation with him before he met Sherman, and he had met Sherman and given him President Lincoln's message, saying: "God bless General Sherman, and God bless the stars and stripes of his troops. Before our boats met and as soon as we got within earshot, he kept hallooing to me and asking me all sorts of questions about the news and the welfare of his friends whom I had lately been associated with. As our boats came together--he was, you know, on the flag ship--I jumped on to the star ship and seized General Sherman by the hand. He grasped my hand firmly, and before I said anything else, told him Lincoln's message to him. He kept his eyes upon the deck all the time

It was speaking and I could see by his face that he felt it deeply.

"GENERAL SHERMAN'S APPEARANCE at this time formed a strange contrast to that of the naval officers. Captain McGowan, of the revenue cutter Nemaha, the man who was in command on the Star of the West when that vessel attempted to supply Fort Sumpter, and General J. O. Foster and staff were in company with the force on the flag ship. All but Sherman were in full dress uniform. The naval officers were resplendent in gold lace and brass buttons. The revenue marine officers looked fresh and clean in their new clothes, and Gen. Foster and staff were out in the most gorgeous attire of the army. Gen. Sherman on the other hand was seedy and shabby. His face was bronzed by the sun and wind of that long march, his clothing was worn out, and what was left was dusty and tramped at the edges.

"The army at this time was at Kings Bridge up the Ogechee river, and Gen. Sherman wanted the mail taken there. He was anxious that I should get there first, in advance of the admiral's flagship and the revenue cutter. He directed me to proceed to the obstruction at the mouth of the Ogechee river. There were piles which had been driven in to prevent any ship going up the river. The Island City was a smaller boat than the Admiral's flagship or the revenue cutter Nemaha, and when General Sherman came on board the next morning just at daylight he told me that he wanted me to get through the obstructions before the admiral's flagship or the revenue cutter Nemaha, on which General Foster and his staff were, and for that purpose it would be better for the boat to go up and hold on to the 'eggs' so that when enough of them had been pulled across she could all through and go on her way to King's bridge, where the army was. The general said: 'I will signal over to the rice mill that you are here with the mail, and they will signal to the army, and everybody will be on the lookout for you. I was your host and the general issued orders notwithstanding the admiral, Gen. Foster and Col. Babcock, who had just arrived with dispatches from Gen. Grant, thought I ought to give the flag-ship precedence. The Island City squeezed through the opening in the obstructions as soon as it was possible to do so, and proceeded to King's Bridge, where more than twenty thousand troops were assembled to give me welcome. No man so humble as I ever received so cordial and enthusiastic a welcome. I was again with the soldiers I had known at Fort Henry and Donelson, Nashville and Memphis at Vicksburg, Shiloh, and Chattanooga. I had been with them on the Mississippi River from Cairo to New Orleans, and along the railroad from Louisville to Atlanta. There I had given them all their letters from home from time to time, and here again on the termination of that long march I was with my pouches full of the letters for which they had waited so long, and of which they had thought so much. The mail messengers who had been associated with me in all the campaigns of the valley of the Mississippi, and who had shouldered their muskets for the march to the sea, reported to me that the more than three hundred sacks of mail matter was soon ready for distribution. We had it so arranged that it could be distributed as easily and as quickly as the mail of a city is distributed by carrier. I shall never forget

THE SCENES OF THAT MAIL DELIVERY to the soldiers of that grand army as they got their letters at the close of that memorable march. They waited for their letters with happy but anxious faces. They tore them hastily open as they were handed them, and as they eagerly read their contents their faces rose or fell in response to the glad or sad news which they received. Some of those travel-stained warriors I saw open an envelope, and putting their hands to their eyes, step to one side and go off to weep over the sickness or death of some of their loved ones at home. Others laughed and smiled over the news of the success of their friends and loved ones. Such a scene has all the pathos of a tragedy, mixed with the pleasure of the comedy. Good news and bad, births and deaths, fortune and failure, mixed together there as they do at all times and the world over."

Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty "Enlightening the World" will be a reminder of personal liberty for ages to come. Our country's foundation has Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" been placed, and it will stand through the circles of time as a monument of the physical emancipation of thousands, who by its use have been relieved from consumption, consumptive night sweats, bronchitis, coughs, spitting of blood, weak lungs, and other throat and lung affections.

Ex-member of congress John P. Finerty received an urgent invitation to the seventh political meeting at Chicago on Sunday evening.

"Acted Like a Charm." This is what Mrs. Mayer, of Baronne street, New Orleans, says of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. A "charm" works quietly, surely, promptly, thoroughly and with delightful effect. That is just what this wonderful family medicine works on invalids who have been suffering the woes of liver complaint, dyspepsia and impoverished blood. Those who know it will say it is a complete cure for dyspepsia, weakness, malaria, neuralgia, etc.

The clearance of the leading cities of the union for the last week was 942,199,759, a decrease of 84-6 per cent compared with the corresponding week last year.

Mr. Allister Brown, Auckland, New Zealand, writes: "I had an excruciating attack of rheumatism in my right arm. I used less than half a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, and I feel perfectly free from pain."

The freight house and several cars of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg railway were burned at Cape Vincent on Saturday. Loss, $5,000.

DESS'S SALAD DRESSING & COLD MEAT SAUCE is made from the freshest, purest and choicest condiments obtainable. In using it, taste, labor, anxiety and disappointment are prevented.

"During a wind storm Sunday afternoon, a large sign on the roof of No. 328 Grand street, Pittsburgh, fell carrying with it a large mass of bricks to the sidewalk. Two young ladies, Bella Conley and Agnes Johnson, and an old man named Dennis, were standing at the time. Miss Conley was killed almost instantly. Miss Johnson was picked up insensible, with both legs and nose broken. The old man escaped with a few scratches. It is thought Miss Johnson will recover.

O, my back! That lame back is caused by kidney disease. Stop it at once by Hunt's (Kidney and Liver) Remedy.

Good news ought to be told; and it is good news that Hunt's Remedy has cured the worst of kidney diseases, and can do it again.

THE MEASLY MUGWUMPS.
A Few Significant Rewards Awarded Curtis Williams' Crowd.

Beecher's Variegated Views--Prospective Cabinet Changes--Joe McDonald and the Union--Humor.

Special Correspondence of THE BEE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1.—An Alabama editor has announced that Henry Ward Beecher while in that state recently, declared in favor of a southern man for the presidency four years hence, and named Secretary Lamar as the man. It was suggested last autumn that Beecher's mind was slightly affected; that it was a little off its balance. This suggestion receives some confirmation from the opinion expressed by him, as above stated, in regard to the next president. Beecher has the credit here of having secured the appointment of Ed. J. Phelps as minister to England; and it is said Cleveland hardly knew of him before. Another spot to the mugwump; Edmund Juseen, brother-in-law to Schurz, known as mugwump, they would neither ask for offices for themselves or their friends. Can't always tell. Perhaps it would be as well for Beecher to eschew politics and attend to the ministry, or he may find himself as much mixed in his politics, as he has been for several years past in his theology. The speaking of Joe McDonald reminds me of a patriotic deed of his during the war, which was related to me while engaged in missionary work in Indiana last autumn. The "Knights of the Golden Circle" in that state formed a conspiracy to liberate the rebel prisoners confined in camp near Indianapolis. The governor made no preparations to give them an unexpected reception. When the train approached the city bearing several hundred of the conspirators who expected to be joined by as many more there, they were greatly surprised to see several regiments of union troops drawn up, and batteries planted in positions to resist the expected march. Their courage and dignity failed them, and they hustled out of the cars pell mell, running down to Pogue's run, and throwing their guns and pistols, scattered in all directions.

The conspirators had previously sent to Indianapolis by freight a few boxes marked "Bibles" and "Sunday school books," directed to their friends in the city, but which they did not dare to take away from the freight house, they knowing what the boxes contained. When they were opened, they were found to be filled with guns and pistols. Judging by their titles and intentions the acquaintance with bibles and school books must have been only in name; and when the doings and policies of the democratic party for the last twenty-five years are passed in review, one can scarcely refrain from thinking the last remark might have been an apt application to the case of McDonald draws forth a very friendly feeling from me.

I am not a prophet, or the son of a prophet, but, nevertheless, the prediction is ventured that the present cabinet will not remain long intact in its present shape. Lamar is naturally, and constitutionally indolent, likes his ease; but he is the head of a branch of the government which is trying to do what he does not wish to do, perhaps as much, or more so, than any other branch of the government. He will soon tire of it, and will take a foreign mission. Into that vacancy, more than likely, my friends of whom I have been writing, "Old Saddlebacks," as some designate him, Joe McDonald will probably walk. Mr. Hendricks to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is the ambition of Attorney General Garland to occupy a seat upon the bench of the supreme court of the United States. If a vacancy should occur there, it may be expected that Garland will be selected to fill it. This will open the way for the Wisconsin attorney, Col. Vilas, whose ambition is to be attorney general, and he will get there whenever Garland vacates; and this may open the door for my friend, Dr. Miller, to walk into the postmaster general's office. Some people here, affected with Angliophobia, Frenchophobia or some other kind of phobia, are trying to introduce a new twang to the name of the postmaster, generally by pronouncing it veelas, thinking that more tony; but the postmaster general says his name is Vilas, and he ought to know. This reminds me of Wm. Ware Peck, whom Hayes sent to the judge in Wyoming. This is his relation. He was holding court at Green River on one occasion, and when a witness took the stand, the attorney asked him his name, he replied, "John G. Shadrack."

The court: "Stop, sir, your name is not Shadrack, it is a mistake."

The witness: "My father always spelled and pronounced his name Shadrack."

Judge: "Well, I tell you, the name Shadrack which we find in the Bible, in connection with Moses and Ithebed-wego."

Witness: "I think I ought to know how to spell and pronounce my own name."

Judge: "Fined ten dollars for contempt of court, sir."

This is the judge who was assigned by an act of the Wyoming legislature, passed unanimously by both houses, save one vote, to what was known as the sage brush district, having few inhabitants, though not quite populous, and for slaying which the writer suffered martyrdom at the hands of the late Rutherford B. Hayes, president of the United States.

By the way, did you know that Rutherford B. Hayes and the late Dr. Burchard, now deceased, (in one sense) of alternative memory, are cousins? When that relationship was made known to me, it was not difficult to account for that dreadful faux pas.

Mr. Hendricks had one little office under his complete and unquestioned control, that of messenger to the vice president. In order to promote reform, Y. P. becomes convinced that it is imperatively necessary for him to remove the old messenger, and to appoint in his stead his own nephew; and thereby reform is promoted. The chief of the dead-letter division of the postoffice department, a faithful officer, is removed to make room for the son-in-law of Senator Colquhoun of Georgia; all in the interest of reform.

The humorists of the house have gone, have left to return no more, at least for an indefinite time. The walls and the arches of that hall will no more resound to the uproarious laughter induced by the flashing sallies of their wit. "Sunset" Cox, Horv of Michigan, Belford of the Rockies, and Tom Ochiltree of Texas, will be missed, but "Though lost to sight, To memory dear," they can be survived as jesters, they were not without good; they contributed to relieving the monotony of debate, and to arousing sleeping members, for their obtaining the floor was always a signal for attention. It is a misfortune for one to acquire the reputation of being par excellence, a wit, so much is expected of him, he is supposed to be surcharged with wit, and at all times. Cox appreciated this, and once said his reputation in that respect had been a drawback to him, because whenever he rose to speak, something funny was always expected from him, and that would oftentimes tempt him to try to be funny when he was not in the mood for it, for the something to talk seriously. Proctor, Knott achieved a wide reputation by his Duluth speech in the house in which he spoke of Duluth as the "zeith city of the untailed seas," a very pretty thought; but he afterwards expressed regret that he overdid it, the speaker for the remainder of the day, created the expectation that he would over afterwards continue to play that role, which was not congenial to his feelings to do; and I think he never essayed it again while in the house, and now probably has not the opportunity while serving as governor of Kentucky.

Cox could not do as well as fun, and outside of politics, generally advanced correct views. He was ready and apt in debate and not slow to cross swords with any one; but that "Shoo-ly" speech of Ben. Butler was too much for him, he was completely annihilated for the time. It will be remembered he was making a speech in Butler's manner, as if he felt it all without flinching, and waited his time. Ben. Butler was drawing to a close, Ben. Threling Cox was drawing to the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored; and many, who had met the sting of his sarcasm and ridicule, locked with complacency upon his discomfiture. Cox lost his temper--was mad, furiously mad, and began to reply by denouncing Butler severely; the form he was waving Cox, into nonentity, uttered the line from the doggerel, which was in the mouths of all the street gamins at the time, and with all the derision and contempt of manner he should throw in the words, "Shoo-ly, don't bother me." The house dissolved itself for while into uncontrolled laughter. It was to Cox as if a cannon shot had struck him; he was completely floored