HOSPITAL WORK AT THE FRONT. Surgeon-in-Chief Pope's Arrangements for the Cuban Campaign. INSIDE VIEW OF A FIELD HOSPITAL. Equipment of Corps for the Care of Soldiers—Hard Work Expected—Experts Give Battle to Yellow Jack. Ever since the first army tents were pitched in Tampa the Hospital corps of the regular army has been actively at work. Surgeon Benjamin F. Pope, who has just been promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel of volunteers, is the surgeon-in-chief of the army stationed here. Upon him falls the responsibility of preparing the medical department for the Cuban campaign. The Hospital corps, like every other branch of the service, has been in preparation for the last thirty years. Stores and equipments were needed as well as recruits, and nowhere so badly as at Tampa, with the army of invasion. The surgeons who were stationed at the various regimental posts and barracks came to Tampa when the troops which they served were called there. Since then Dr. Pope has examined and contracted with a number of men who are to go to Cuba in the capacity of assistant surgeons and acting assistant surgeons. Many of these are Cubans and immunes, who have made a particular study of yellow fever. The army surgeons are prepared for most anything in the way of up-to-date surgery, but few of them have had any practical experience in the dreaded Cuban disease; this makes the expert additions to their corps very welcome. As soon as each regiment camped in the location selected for it here by the commanding officer, the hospital and dispensary tents were pitched and the corps of men with the red cross on their arms fell into the daily routine of camp duty as easily as the soldiers of the line. A number of recruits from the nursing forces of Bellevue and other hospitals, who had enlisted, were sent down and had to be broken in. They were used to all kinds of nursing, but the ambulance and stretcher drills and "first aid to

THE NEW DIVISION FIELD HOSPITAL AT TAMPA. The wounded were something decidedly new, and they found that private nursing in a great city was very different from camp nursing, where every one of them was obliged to be expert in lifting and carrying the wounded from the field. It is warm work for Tampa, and will be found warm in Cuba, too. Quarters of the Corps. The surgeons live like the officers of the line, but the assistants, composed of stewards, assistant stewards and privates, lodge in small shelter tents near the hospital and sleep two in a tent. The regular army rations are given out to them as well as to the hospital patients, but, as the patients can seldom eat the army fare, the surgeon in charge sells the rations which he does not use and uses the money to buy the delicacies which are more suited to their condition. This is called the "Hospital fund." In time of peace the corps usually trains its own nurses, but at the present juncture the surgeon-in-chief is very glad to get hold of men who have had both training and experience. One of the young men from Bellevue said that they were getting used to roughing it and that they were never better in their lives. He said that whereas they had previously, in their nursing capacity, been autocrats and giving their doses and he was looking about him in fear and trembling for the sight of an army officer whom he had nursed the year before. "If he finds me here he won't do a thing to me!" the young fellow concluded, ruefully. Dr. Pope has just organized and established one of the few large field hospitals which have been in existence in this country for many years. The regimental hospitals and dispensaries, with the quota of surgeons and assistants provided for each regiment, still remain and are permanent institutions. The large hospital is the Division Field Hospital and is attached to the entire division and not to any particular regiment. Seventy tents have been pitched and all the patients who are ill enough to be in bed are quartered there. Out of the thousands of troops here there are but thirty of these patients. They are brought up to the hospital in ambulances, but since the main ward being the upright, the sergeants comes forward, assigns a cot to the man and reports his arrival to the doctor in charge, who immediately makes an examination and prescribes for him, giving the prescription to the steward on duty, who puts it up in the dispensary tent and administers it according to directions. As the field hospital now in operation in Tampa is the one which will immediately be set up in Cuba on the landing of the troops, an idea of its construction is rather interesting. The surgeon-in-charge, Major A. H. Afel, and his staff, appointed by Dr. Pope, will serve in the same capacities throughout the campaign. Major Afel has two assistants, and one of these, Dr. W. E. Parker of New Orleans, is the only surgeon appointed from civil life to the hospital service. Their quarters are to the left of the hospital tents and consist of a tent apiece with a "cot" or swivel in front and a mess tent. The shelter tents of the assistants stretch in a long row in front of the hospital. The horses are corralled beyond. A Field Hospital. For the hospital itself seven tents are now in use, and there are six more in reserve. They are pitched in the form of a T, the main ward being the upright, the dispensary, operating room and negro ward, the cross pieces. The patients are placed in light portable cots, which face each other at either side just as in the ordinary hospital.

the field and that everything that can be done in the way of field surgery will be done. THE OLD-TIMERS. Joseph Mackey, who was distinguished as being the oldest Army man in Pennsylvania, and it is thought, in the country as well, has just died at his home in Tamaqua, Pa. Miss Lydia Moses celebrated her ninetieth birthday a few days ago in the house in Portsmouth, N. H., in which she was born and has lived uninteruptedly all her life. Another of the famous Light Brigade that charged at Balaclava has died. He was David Grantham of Sandhurst, Eng., and his funeral was attended by a number of survivors of that charge. Mrs. Eliza Brown, the oldest postmistress in the United Kingdom, has just died at the age of 93 at Auchmuthe, over the post-office of which place she had presided for fifty-eight years. She was the widow of the village schoolmaster. The oldest woman chorister in the world is dead. She was 86 years old, and up to the time of her death was titular leader of the music at St. Thomas church, Hyde, Isle of Wight. She had been a member of the choir for seventy-nine years and had never missed a service. Ex-Secretary Richard W. Thompson of Indiana has been celebrating another birthday, the eighty-ninth, but his health was too feeble to permit of the public celebration that had been planned. Mr. Thompson is the one man in the United States who has seen all the presidents save Washington, and known most of them personally. He was a member of congress as far back as Tyler's presidency. A Sense of Security. "Washington Star." "Aren't you afraid some of these Americans will be irritated by your insults?" inquired a Madrid statesman. "Suppose they are." "They may retaliate in such a way as to compel you to do something in defense of your honor." "Oh, that's all right. They can't pronounce my name well enough to make me sure I'm the man they're talking about."

INTERIOR OF DISPENSARY TENT (STEWARD AT TABLE; ASSISTANT IN BACKGROUND). The smell of antiseptics is in the air, and the stewards and privates pass back and forth among the prostrated soldiers, taking temperatures, and giving their doses and tending the patients who are at work tending the operating room or compounding medicines in the dispensary. Apart from itself is the tent reserved for infectious diseases. It is some twenty-five feet from the main ward, but at present it shelters nothing more dangerous than measles. Measures are being taken to isolate also the two or three typhoid fever patients, who, it is needless to say, will not take part in the Cuban campaign. Everywhere is order, cleanliness and system. Within the precincts of the Field Hospital is the tent or office of Colonel Pope. Here is performed most of the executive and clerical work of the corps in Tampa—and it is infinite. As the volunteers arrive they must be supplied as well as the regulars. Their half organized departments must be fully organized and got into working trim at the earliest possible moment. Their equipments do not equal those of the regular corps. While they are all supplied with "first aid" knapsacks, they are not, as a rule, provided with field medicine chests. Orderlies are continually riding up with dispatches and requisitions are brought in for approval. Everything given out or taken in must be recorded. Nearly all of this work, in addition to the correspondence in regard to supplies and reports, fall to the stewards, who are very efficient men. The surgeons have made up their minds to expect hard work when the army gets to Cuba. They feel that they are merely getting in trim now. They remember such battles in the civil war as Chickamauga and Gettysburg, where the surgeons worked forty-eight hours without a pause, until they rested as they stood. They believe that the limbs of many men which would have been amputated at the time of the late war will be saved now, because of the wonderful advance in the knowledge of antiseptics. They claim that Uncle Sam will send a wonderfully well equipped corps in this respect to
