BOILER EXPLODES AT A MINE

Fireman Ed Fredigal is Probably Fatally Scalded.

SEVERAL OTHERS RECEIVE INJURIES

Miners Below Are Panic Stricken When Their Signals Are Unanswered, but All Escape Without Injury.

DES MOINES, Aug. 6.—(Special Telegram.)—One of a battery of four boilers in the power plant of the Christy Coal Mining company, at the mine two miles east of the city, blew up at 10 o'clock this morning, wrecking the building and blowing the other boilers out of place. Ed Fredigal, a fireman, was terribly and probably fatally scalded; William Moses, a dump hand, was badly burned and scalded about the head, face and arms; and a half dozen were more or less injured.

As soon as the boiler exploded, the engines, pumps and air fans stopped, and there was somewhat of a panic among the 200 miners working on the 100-foot level. They ran to the hoisting shaft and signalled to haul up, but there was no response. There is a small ladder in the main shaft for just such emergencies, and the frightened miners came swarming to the top over this, and all got out without an accident. That every one of the fifteen men on the scene of the explosion were not killed is a miracle.

William Heaton, a farmer, with two sons, was loading wood fifty yards away, his two sons being on the wagon. The explosion wrecked the wagon and killed the horses, but the men escaped.

The engineer, who had hold of the throttle at the moment of the explosion, was blown through a window, but was not injured. The loss is $5,000.

A temporary pumping and power plant for running the pumps and fans was started this afternoon, and the big mine, one of the largest in the state, will not be flooded.

Ed Fradigall, the fireman who was scalded in the boiler explosion at the Christie mine this morning, died this evening.

The first cigarettes to be put on sale under the guarantee of the American Tobacco company are on sale at a local cigar store this afternoon. A consignment of 500,000 were received this morning and are now displayed in the window. The cigarettes were delivered by the express company. They were brought in baskets and deposited in heaps on the floor of the store. All the cigar dealers will refuse to receive them if they are contained in any receptacle except the original package of ten cigarettes.

A state camp of Salvation Army officers and members opened with a meeting in the auditorium at Chautauqua park this evening. The Salvation Army has twenty companies in the Iowa division which is under the command of Major Blanche B. Cox, who is on General Booth-Tucker's staff. There are about 600 members of the Salvation Army in the state, 100 being officers. Major Cox has ordered all the officers to attend and quite a number of privates are here. Half the officers were present this evening and will remain until Wednesday. The other half will come for an officers' council Wednesday and remain until the close of the camp, one week from tomorrow.

The officers who will lead meetings are: Ensign Long, Ensign Anderson, Captain Butler, Adjutant McAbee, Ensign Yoder, Adjutant Cotton, Ensign Simnott, Captain Robinson, Captain Deters, Captain McDonald, Captain and Mrs. Trusty, Captain Tallman.

The enrolling of recruits who must sign an oath on muster roll that they will abstain from drink and tobacco will close the camp.

Narrowly Escaped Death.

VINTON, Ia., Aug. 6.—(Special.)—Henry B. Kelley of this place had a narow escape from death on the horns of a mad bull in the stock yards. Without warning it made a charge on him and threw him back over his (the bull's) head. The stroke both numbed and stunned him, but he managed to grab the bull by the ring in his nose and around the neck. The bull then went charging around the lot with him and bruised him badly and also broke one rib. A son came to the rescue, handed his father a pitchfork, and the latter regained his feet and prodded the animal into subjection, but was completely exhausted by the contest.

Ottumwa Courier: And now that Weaver has the nomination a sane man is forced to wonder what good it will do him.

Burlington Hawkeye: After all Iowa soldiers may have a chance to vote without calling an extra session of the legislature. They will be at home in time to ballot.

Cedar Rapids Republican: According to some of the democratic papers the democratic campaign in Iowa this year is to be based on fault finding with the republican administration. What an inspiring issue that will be.
