LONDON'S PETTICOAT LANE.

A Strange Market that Decuples a Square Mile in the Big City. Petticoat lane beats any place of the sort ever saw for size and swarming humanity, says a London letter, and for the reflection or demonstration of the extreme poverty of a multitudinous population. It is not a slum so much as it is the rendezvous and market or exchange of all the slums, * 1:10 pm | It is an outdoor secondhand shop of mindbewildering immensity. It covers a square mile of London just off Bishopsgate street, in "the city," and monopolizes a score of streets within that area. It exists only on Sunday and completely blots out of notice the petty tradesmen who do business op those streets on the other days of the week. It is Phil May's happiest stamping grounds, to which he reserts for types of the coster, the fakir, the few Hebrews that are not at top of high society over here, and for the Bill Sykeses, and flower girls and street creatures of all the lower orders. It is the place where the Jews of London are the merchants and the very poor are their customers; where theatrical plunging careers like that of Barney Barnato are often begun. Many cities in Europe bave Sunday sec-oud-hand fairs of this sort. That at the Central halls in Parts is well known and there is a big one in St. Petersburg, excellently housed in a sort of double arcade, in which the Jews do business lightly all the week and heavily on the first day. The best and biggest and dirtiest and most peculiar exchange of the sort that I ever saw, however, until last Sunday in London, is the "Louse Market" of Moscow. Not a pretty name, yet one that must be written because it is true, famous and eminetly descriptive. This market is also perennial, but is at its best on Sundays in the summer. * 4:00 pm  7:40 pm 11:40 am side, and is such a ragbag and omnium side, and is such a ragbag and omnium gathering of a place that one may buy there either costly jewelry and diamonds or bits of broken clocks or furs or worn-out boots or beautiful church ornaments or the sifted emptyings of ash barrels. Very polite folks call it the "thieves' market," but I notice all such places are so called all over the world, also that the people who sell goods in them like to be considered as having stolen what they offer, to beget the idea *11:55 pm that they can sell their wares for less than they are worth, because they paid nothing for them. As I turned out of Bishopsgate street around the famous bar room known as 'Dirty Dick's" I saw before me the outer edge of the vast swarm of people pressed side to side between the venders along the curbs-for the poor cannot be choosers, and make no complaint at having to trade in * 4:20 pm the streets, so long as they can get a great deal of the necessities of life for a very little of their money. Along the principal street of the district, which has no * 8:25 am Petticoat lane, yet is all known by that name, the goods on sale were mainly old (Should be read daily by all interested, as changes may occur at any time.)
