The Vicar Had The Right Answer

Builders of the world's mightiest cathedrals had plenty of construction problems, but none of them could have faced the prospect of their structures being washed away every spring.
Which is exactly what happened at Moose Factory, Ontario, on the fringe of the Canadian Arctic.
For a few years after the small wooden Church of St. Thomas was built on the banks of the Moose River, at Moose Factory, Ontario, parishioners grew more and more concerned. And they had good reason to be.
As the ice went out of the river each spring, the swirling waters of the muddy Moose would gently ease the Anglican house of worship off its foundations. Then they would place it down a few yards closer to the north end of town.
Several proposals were made, but only the vicar's was practicable. Instead of fighting the floods, he suggested, why not let them have their way.
At his suggestion, the parishioners bored holes in the floor, then waited for next spring. Sure enough, the wooden plugs from one of numerous holes in the church floor, floated quietly in through the holes—then flowed out again as the river subsided.
The parishioners checked. The church had not moved an inch.
Thought it does not flood as much as before, tourists coming over by canoe from the rail terminus at nearby Mooseonee, from where there is direct connection with the Canadian National transcontinental lines at Coburne and North Bay, pause to talk about the holes in the floor of St. Thomas's. Wooden plugs now keep out the winter cold.
Not only the holes in the floor attract the visitor to the Moose Factory church. Many are charmed by the altar drapes of moosehide, headed with the painstaking craftsman. The pulpit and lectern are similarly adorned.

Parishioners bored the holes years ago when floodwaters from nearby Moose River moved the building bodily every spring. After that, the water merely flowed in and out of the church through the holes, leaving its position undisturbed. FNS

Upping Senate Pay Looms Again

LINCOLN — Nebraska voters will have another chance next fall to meet head-on a problem that is growing in the legislature—the pay of the senators.
Now, the 43 lawmakers get only $872 a year, with nothing extra for a special session and travel expenses once to and from a session.
As a result, nearly every senator, unless he is retired and there are a few of those, takes a financial beating to sit in the unicameral. In recent years this has caused many capable lawmakers to shun another term.
In the fall of 1938, citizens will ballot on a constitutional amendment that would double the pay of the senators, raising it to $1,744 per year.
It will be the third time the salary question has been presented at the polls. In 1950, it failed again, although there were more persons favoring higher salaries than against. However, the margin for the last did not meet the legal minimum.
The last change in paychecks came in 1938.
Gov. Victor Anderson, commenting on the salary problem, said: "I feel to get the right kind of people (for the legislature) you have to pay. Now, many senators lose money while they are down here."

The pay question is one of the reasons that the senators have not voted to increase membership of the legislature, although there is some agreement of what areas would be subdivided to make new legislative districts.
Under the constitution, only $75,000 can be paid to lawmakers in a biennium legally, the size of the senate can be anywhere from 30 to 50 members.
Governor Anderson feels there should be about 65 senators, but he also adds this would require a constitutional change. To increase the membership to only 50 would aggravate the salary problem by reducing pay.
In past sessions, nearly all state officials, including the governor, have been given pay hikes.
"Undoubtedly one will come for the men and women who make Nebraska laws. But observers say, since dormitories are built with revenue bonds and they should finance their operations, except for heat, light and water.
A member of the board, State Education Commissioner P. B. Decker, said this probably means rent will have to be raised at the dormitories. It now averages about $70 per semester, but this varies according to type and age of the accommodations.
Johnson also criticized Dr. Neal Gomon, president of Peru college, and Dr. Barton Kline, president of Chadron.
The auditor questioned sale of a manure by Kline to the college and purchase of some cattle by him with reimbursement from college funds. Kline said he made no profit on these and took the action to try and help the school.
Gomon was questioned on improper accounting of money he withdrew from the college revolving fund and sale of a deep freeze and a refrigerator to Peru college. He likewise said he made the sale at no profit, to help the school, and said accounting of the funds he withdrew for school business is available.
Later, Kline criticized Johnson's method in bringing the situation to the attention of the normal board. Kline wrote the governor stating that "implications and charges made by Auditor Johnson that there has been intent to defraud are so utterly preposterous that I cannot refrain from laying the questioned procedures before you entirely."

Intestate Highway—
The rate of progress on building the interstate highway in Nebraska has been tentatively blue-printed by State Engineer L. N. Ress.
Ress said he plans to average from $20 to $22 million worth of construction yearly during the next 15 years in Nebraska. He gave that estimate to Bert Tallamy, federal highway administrator.
Tallamy was concerned about
