Elkhorn Is Running Bank Full

The Elkhorn river is running bank-full (see above photo), carrying away water from melting snow and recent heavy rainfall in the upper basin. This is a view photographed at Chicago & North Western railroad's mud bridge located three miles east of O'Neill. High water on a steel bridge immediately west of Atkinson undermined approaches and caused the bridge to be closed off to traffic late Tuesday. The bridge crosses the Elkhorn there. The Elkhorn valley in the Newport-Stuart area is a veritable sea of water.—The Frontier Photo.
