Politics— If the amazing Nebraska election did anything it has welded the republican party into a stronger unit for 1960.

That is the talk inside the party among those considered to be among the "top brass". However, republicans feel the democratic strength which snapped a GOP domination of 18 years in the state had other effects.

One, they reason, is there will be more candidates for office from the republican side in 1960 since the "nicety" of not running against an incumbent no longer will be observed.

These same people, some of them not considered "regulars," feel the losses on November 4 will set up a situation whereby the party could be split wide open in the 1960 primary.

This, of course, could well happen. Other republicans feel the more candidates there are in the 1960 primary, the better choice republican voters will have.

This, the reasoning goes, should produce a good candidate. There is one thing certain, however. Two years from now Nebraska will experience one of the hottest primary elections in many years on the republican ticket.

Indications are the democrats could possibly swing into the normal tactics of a party in power—stick with a winner, which is what the GOP has been doing for nearly two decades.

The work pace in the capitol, which normally proceeds briskly, has slowed to a walk.

As a matter of practicality, an incoming party must keep most of the technical employees, for some time at least. The reason is obvious—government is a complex business and experience is vital. Experience, therefore, keeps government operating.

If government is operating smoothly the incoming party gets a head start in convincing the public that it can do a creditable job.

Long-time statehouse employees noted that when Dwight Griswold took over from Democrat Roy Cochran 18 years ago, he kept a large number of employees who went to work under a democratic administration.

There are a surprising number of workers in the capitol who have been there in technical positions since the 1920s. A few arrived earlier.

How Much Should Agencies Spend?

State Capitol News . . .

That's Problem for '59 Legislature

LINCOLN—How much should state agencies spend during the next two years? The state fiscal budget has been increased steadily.

This, however, does not necessarily mean state senators have been spendthrifts.

Federal money has caused the mushrooming of state fiscal policies over the past years, plus demands of the public.

The last legislature, before the session, showed indications of being the tightest money-wise in recent years. Yet it rebuffed the even more frugal attitude of Gov. Victor Anderson and surpassed his recommendations.

One of the big headaches was the money which came into the highway department in busked baskets, figuratively speaking.

That was the result of accelerated programs on the interstate highway, and other state roads. This situation is determined in Washington.

The problem of state taxes will loom heavy in the 1959 session, and pinned to the problem will be the future of the democratic party in this state.

Most observers close to government will agree the state must spend more money to meet the demands of the public for services.

How far this can go on the state level without hurting the democrats, who won the first foothold in the capitol in 18 years, is not known.

Looming in the background is the tight money policy advocated by Governor Anderson, November 4.

Any sizeable increase will be even more noticeable, when compared with Gov. Anderson's "hard tack" policies. This again could cause a split in the Democrats.

Size of the problem was brought into focus when the University of Nebraska, one of the four big spenders of state tax money, made known its money needs for the next biennium.

The school says it needs $5.8 million more in state taxes, mainly to improve the salary level.

Southside club met with Mrs. Leon Priebe Tuesday, November 25, with a covered dish luncheon at noon. The Christmas program followed. Mrs. Leon Beckwith gave the Christmas story. Mrs. Walter Puckett and Mrs. Robert Fox had charge of the entertainment. Gifts were brought for the children's hospital. There was also a gift exchange for the ladies.

Martens Winner of Leader Award

Robert ("Bob") Martens has been awarded an electric drill as the outstanding leader in 4-H club rural electrification projects in Nebraska.

Presentation was made Monday evening by Ed Wilson of O'Neill.

Martens has been the leader of the rural electrification project in the Clover 4-H club for the past eight years and he attended the first state meeting for leaders' training for this type of work.

His trip was sponsored by the Nebraska Valley Electric Membership corporation (REMA) unit headquartered at O'Neill.

The Clover club has given electric demonstration at local county and state fairs. Ronnie Hochman, member of the Clover club, won an electric drill for his work in the rural electrification project during the time Bob has been leader of the project.

Not only is he Rural Electrification leader but he and his sister, Helen have led the entire club, consisting of 25 to 35 members. It is active in other community affairs.
