

Two Budgets Faced by New Legislature

One from Retiring Governor

LINCOLN—A big problem for about every household in Nebraska is looming now in the capitol. That can mean only one thing—the budget.

With the change in administration the legislature will be faced with two budgets—one by outgoing governor, Victor E. Anderson, and the other from the new governor, Ralph G. Brooks.

Budgets are had enough for the average family, but in state government they are doubly difficult. The reason is state agencies must project and decide how much money they need for a two-year period which ends 2½ years from the time they make the decision.

A biennial budget must take into account any emergencies a department figures it could encounter and yet not be too high so as to invite the pruning knife in the legislature.

The pattern on a budget begins when an agency makes a calculation on funds required. This is submitted to the governor who holds a hearing and calls in the agency to defend why it must have the money.

The governor then makes his recommendation to the legislature where the subject is assigned to a budget committee which holds a hearing also, calling in the agency, then recommending to the legislature which makes the decision.

Despite the involved process, it is rare that an agency runs out of funds before the two years is up. This has been one of the big arguments against changing legislative sessions to yearly instead of biennial.

A final tally of requests for tax money by 41 agencies that use it show they want $9.4 million more than was appropriated by the legislature two years ago.

This could boost the state property tax levy to $3.79 instead of the present $7.97, if all the requests are granted. However, there usually is trimming by the legislature and additions also with the end result that the budget goes up.

Interstate Highway—That politically dangerous problem—the interstate highway—will be shuffled over to the democratic administration of Governor-elect Ralph Brooks for decision.

Gov. Victor Anderson, outgoing republican, made that clear in a statement on the question of when location of the four-lane highway west of Lincoln would be announced.

The chief executive said first of all, work on figures obtained during a survey of two possible routes for the road—one north, the other south of the Platte river—is not complete. It will be after January 1 before the job is done, Governor Anderson said.

Governor Anderson commented that he felt policy decisions should be left to the Brooks administration.

Actually, what his action does is push to the democrats the tough job of telling people where the road will go, with the end result that someone will be angry.

The state highway department has been working on the two routes for the past two years. And right-of-way squabbles cost Vic no end of votes in the November election.

Air Network—Nebraska's four-year drive for a local airline network has paid off.

The civil aeronautics board in Washington awarded a minimum of two round trips daily on Nebraska routes with Lincoln and Omaha hubs of the new system.

State Aeronautics Director Roland Harr says the new service will go into effect February 16.

The CAB expressed confidence in the ability of the Nebraska department and went along with the state's entire air plan.

This makes Nebraska the focal point in the nation in a system of local air lines where traffic is stimulated by a well planned promotional program.

Commented Harr: "We all fought together until we got it. We made up our mind what was needed, tried to be reasonable about it and got all cities to agree on the route pattern."

"Then," Harr continued, "we received the unanimous support of our congressional delegation. Working together did it."

The network will shorten the distance between Nebraska cities many of which are now as far away from the state capitol in air miles as Chicago, Ill.

But much of north-Nebraska is without any public transport. For example, there's no way to get from O'Neill to Gordon or Merriman. To get to Chadron one must travel to Grand Island or Omaha and dog-leg around.

When North Western trains 13 and 14 came off in July, no provision was made for service to intermediate points. Only two or three towns are served by Frontier airlines.

Bingo—Opponents as well as backers of proposed bingo legislation in the next legislature are working hard to get a suitable law.

Voters approved a constitutional amendment which gives the legislature authority to enact legislation.

State Veterans of Foreign Wars Adjutant Robert Lowe called a meeting to iron out details of a proposed bill. The VFW and Fraternal Order of Eagles co-sponsored a successful petition drive to put the question on the ballot.

Leading the opposition was the Rev. Carroll Lemon, executive secretary of the Nebraska council of churches.

The factions tentatively agreed to proposals to limit operation of bingo games to non-profit organizations, permitting a maximum of 20 games in a 24-hour period and with no consumption of liquor in the same room as the game is held.

A limit of 25 cents per card was recommended as a charge with no one person playing more than two cards at a time in a game. The prize would be limited to three-fourths the total amount paid by players of the game.
