Volunteers Provide Teaching Aids

A recent survey at the University of Nebraska college of medicine in Omaha reveals that an impressive amount of service is provided by the volunteer faculty in the teaching program.

College officials explained that the use of volunteer faculty, for the most part physicians in private practice, is not unusual in medical education. On the contrary, it has been an accepted procedure for many years.

This is in part due to the many complex special areas of study in medicine and to the attempt to provide as much individual supervision as possible during the student's clinical training.

The survey shows that there are 398 persons holding teaching, research and administrative posts at the College of Medicine. Of this number, 293 (74%) volunteer their services at no cost to the State of Nebraska. These volunteers spread out among fifteen different faculty ranks from full professor to demonstrator.

The number of instructional hours given by each volunteer varies with the department to which he is assigned and the subject matter with which he deals.

"It is almost impossible to determine the savings in dollars and cents which comes to the University through the 74 percent of our faculty who are volunteers," said college Dean J. P. Tollman. "However," he added, "if we were to pay them for their services it would mean adding many thousands of dollars to the University budget. Our teaching program is much stronger because of their help."

The majority of volunteers are physicians who give their time to the clinical teaching and supervision of students at University Hospital and the eleven affiliated hospitals and care facilities in Omaha and Lincoln. An additional forty-eight are located in small communities throughout Nebraska where they give the medical student experience in the rural practice of medicine.

Another group of physicians and scientists volunteer their services in basic science teaching and in research.

Further study shows that another tax relief is afforded to Nebraskans through the use of twenty-seven part-time faculty who are paid from various grants and from funds received from the American Medical Education Foundation. These 27 are a part of a group of 49 faculty members who are on a partial-pay basis at the College. These grants and contributions amounted to $110,335 in the 1938-39 budget of the College of Medicine.

The task of the coordination of activities and the major teaching load at the College of Medicine falls on the shoulders of 41 full-time faculty members, about 10 per cent of the total teaching faculty.

In the area of basic science teaching in anatomy, physiology, pharmacology, biochemistry and microbiology the major duties of administration, teaching, research and laboratory supervision are carried almost entirely by full time faculty with the greatest degree of volunteers taking place in the clinical teaching and research under the direction of a small full time faculty. This 10 per cent of the faculty is supported through tax funds.

Humor Helped Lincoln Bear Civil War Woes

A fund of warm humor enabled Abraham Lincoln to bear the burdens of Civil War presidency. Many of the stories told by and about him, have been repeated so often they are legendary; but there are others, less well-known, which give an accurate portrait of the 16th President at this time. In connection with the 1959 sesquicentennial of Lincoln's birth, the February Reader's Digest prints a collection, titled "The Lincoln Who Lives in Anecdote." These are a few from that collection.

Young Abe delivered a sack of grain to a mill owned by the laziest man in the county. As he waited, Abe said "I'll bet I could eat that grain as fast as you're grinding it."

"And just how long do you think you could keep it up?" the miller asked. "Oh," said Lincoln, "until I starved to death, I guess."

Once, as he passed by, a boy called out, "There goes old Mr. Lincoln." Lincoln remarked to a friend, "They commenced saying that when I was scarcely 30."

During the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates, Stephen Douglas called Lincoln a "two-faced man." Lincoln replied: "I leave it to my audience. If I had another face, do you think I would wear this one?"

Discussing the elaborate funeral of an Illinois politician Lincoln said, "Why, if he'd known how big a funeral he was going to have, he would have died years ago."

One old chap, disappointed at not having had a chance to shake President Lincoln's hand at a reception, shouted to him: "Mr. President, up in York state we believe God and Abraham are going to save this country."

Lincoln turned to him with a smile. "My friend," he said, "You're half right."

At a cabinet meeting held on the last day of his life, Lincoln told General Grant he had a feeling he would soon hear some news of great importance.

"Why do you think so?" asked Grant.

"Because I had a dream last night, and ever since the war began I have invariably had the same dream before any important event." He said that in it he saw a ship sailing rapidly over the sea, and that he had seen it before the battles of Bull Run, Antietam, Gettysburg and others.

Later in the day, dismissing all work, he ordered the carriage for a drive with his wife. When she asked him if he would like someone to accompany them, he said, "No, I prefer to ride by ourselves today." She said later that she had never seen him so happy as on that occasion.
