

St. Mary's Academy Students Present Play; 'Smallest of All', Story of Lourdes, France

Despite the swirling snow and a poor attendance, the St. Mary's players presented the play "Smallest of All" during the week.

The play was based on the Song of Bernadette, a former best seller and movie which told the story of Bernadette of Lourdes.

Carol Hoffman played the leading role, Bernadette Soubirous, and her father and mother were played by Renae Hoffman and Jim Shoemaker.

Others in the cast included Clarence Longcor as Abbe Peyramale, Morris Pongratz as the chief of police, Mary Lou Cannon as Arbutnot as Jeannie Abadie. Extras were played by the sodality.

They Didn't Believe Her

One of the more interesting moments of the play came when Abbe Peyramale (Clarence Longcor) reprimands Bernadette (Carol Hoffman), second from left, for what the priest thinks is a lie when Bernadette tells him of a vision she sees near the village of Lourdes, France. The other players are the mother and father of Bernadette (Renae Hoffman and Jim Shoemaker). —The Frontier Photo.

"Blue-White Diamonds"

The term "blue white" still causes much difficulty in the diamond trade. Probably not more than one diamond out of 500 in this country has even THE SLIGHTEST TRACE OF BLUE, yet the term "blue white" has been applied to every color from slight yellowish up. It has stuck in the consumers mind and sometimes he is afraid that he is getting inferior diamonds unless his diamond has some blue in it.

Federal law prohibits use of the term "blue white" when a diamond reveals any color other than blue. Scientific research has revealed that a very small percentage of diamonds can qualify as "blue white."
