Picnic Time — Frankfurter Time

By Marie Gifford

Summertime is picnic time and what's a picnic without plump, juicy frankfurters?

Served with buns and the "trimmings"—mustard, catsup, horseradish and pickles—and a steaming casserole of baked beans, franks are a perfect choice of picnic food. They're easy to tote, fun to fix and just plain wonderful to eat. Best of all, they eliminate the hours in the kitchen which so often turn a picnic into an ordeal for you.

Whether you're picnicking at the beach or park, in the country or in the back-yard, or in the kitchen because a sudden shower has driven you indoors, here's a sure-fire formula for picnic success. Keep things simple. Arrange franks on one side of a tray, relishes in custard cups or dessert molds on the other. Use pie pans and tin cups for serving, bandanas as napkins and a French vegetable basket or collander of fresh vegetables as a centerpiece.

Frankfurters are a blend of ground beef and pork, lightly seasoned, then smoked in link form over hardwood fires and thoroughly steamed. They're ready to eat when you buy them or may be heated over an open fire or in a pan of boiling water. In the latter case, place the franks in the boiling water, cover and let them stand, off the heat, for 7 to 8 minutes, until heated through. Don't boil the franks or the skins will burst and you'll lose those good meat juices.

In bulk or in the package, franks average 8 to 10 to a pound. The usual allowance is 2 to a serving but remember, picnic appetites are not "usual," so plan accordingly.

Outdoor picnic, indoor picnic—it will be a real success if you star franks with the open-fire flavor!
