

Short Rest Periods Pay

By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE, Homemaking Editor

Most everyone has little helps and ideas about making house-keeping easier. All of us want to know the best and easiest way to do things. Most of us do things differently, but everyone can improve and find new and easier ways of doing some of their tasks. Some of us just naturally make things difficult for ourselves, and do not try to save work.

Some folks never plan or look ahead. One week may be filled with leisure time and the next week one can be overwhelmed with what's to be done. Let's learn to organize our time.

Short rest periods will pay out on busy days, although you may not think so. Fifteen-minute rest periods each morning and afternoon make more difference than you think. And the busier you are the more you need them.

Many people spend needless time ironing sheets, dish towels, underwear, pajamas and such items that don't really need to be ironed. No one will be the worse for it if they aren't.

Some of us never learn to cut square biscuits instead of round ones, saving ourselves time, re-rolling and work. Today's bride can use all those casseroles she was given by cooking, serving and storing in them, thus saving a lot of extra labor all the way around.

Use a service cart or large tray to save endless steps in food preparation, mixing and cleaning. Try to use your head to save yourself endless hours of extra work that never needed to be done in the first place.

Perhaps your kitchen needs rearranging. In the main, canned goods, seasoning, platters, kettle lids, and such are more usefully stored next to the stove and will save steps. Store utensils, and supplies that you will use at the sink, either near or under it, and knives, and such things used there should be stored next to it, too.

Have a mixing center and store everything used for this procedure at the center—flour, spices, bowls, baking pans, flavorings, baking powder. A little experimentation will show you how to suit your storage arrangement.

for your kitchen, you may want to change a few things, as time goes along. Have things handy as possible. Sit down to do any work that you can, preparing vegetables, ironing, mending, and such.

Try to have the requisite articles for your kitchen. Get good tools that will last over a long period of time and then take care of them. Have the knives sharp, a can opener that works, and some of the little extra helpful gadgets if possible.

Don't wear uncomfortable, old dress shoes for housework. Have sensible, good-looking, well fitting everyday shoes that save your feet and are easy to keep up. If your feet are comfortable you won't become nearly as tired. Your everyday clothing should be sensible and of a type that is easy to wash and iron. Your dresses should be comfortable.

Take some pride in your appearance about your home. Don't go about straggling and unkempt for the very thought of it and somebody coming will make you tired. You'll feel better if you look better and that's a fact.

Dear Mrs. Pease:

Your column is the first thing I look for in The Frontier and I like to see if there is anyone I know who wins a subscription. Or a good recipe that I want to try.

I have a good one that I think some would like.
