Correlation Needed in Lunches

By BLANCHE SPANN PEASE, Homemaking Editor

Honestly, it doesn't seem possible but September's here again. Time just keeps spinning the wheel of fortune and before the mothers of grade and high school children know it, it's school time again! Vacation's gone and it seems like it only started.

If you send lunch for school youngsters, why don't you try to make school and home lunches correlate? That is, if you send soup in thermos bottles, or to be warmed up at school, why not fix enough for the family at home at the same time and serve the same thing at home? You can fix and freeze sandwiches the night before and fix enough for the stay-at-homers, too. Bring up the sandwiches from the freezer when you pack the school lunches and your own, too, and let them thaw out. They should be ready just at lunch time. The same desserts of fresh fruit or canned fruit can be eaten at both places, and if you plan a gelatin or salad that won't get runny, or have bacteria multiplying in it, it can be served at both places.

Of course, you can't send gelatin salad to school if the weather is hot. But you can send celery and carrot sticks, cabbage or lettuce wedges, with tiny containers of salt or salad dressing which the children can apply. If you eat the same lunch at home and at school, you will achieve more than one point. You'll save time and bother at home when you are so busy during the canning season and you'll likely send a better lunch for the children if you have to eat the same thing at home.

And that's the honest truth! I often wish some of our careless mothers had to eat the lunch they send for their youngsters.

I like peanut butter sandwiches and minced ham sandwiches but if I had to everlastingly eat them, as do some youngsters, I'd be so tired of them I could cry! A good indication of whether or not your children find the lunch you send appetizing, is to notice how much of it they bring back or feed to the dog. Children can get most awfully tired of cheese sandwiches, too, when they are overdone, although cheese is good for them and will supply a milk need they may not otherwise get.

Talk to your teacher and ask her to require the children to wash their hands before eating, to put a napkin on their desk to place their food upon, and to spend a stated amount of time eating their lunch. If you don't, they may be so anxious to go out to play, they won't take time to eat their food. All teachers should see to this but they don't always do so. Most rural school teachers are conscientious, however.

Don't forget that variety is the spice of life in the lunch box, too, and vary the store-bought cookies with home-made ones. Send home-made cup cakes and, if the children are old enough, a wedge of pie in a plastic pie container now and then.

Don't forget the fruits and relishes, pickles for older children, and home-made cup cakes and, if the children are old enough, a wedge of pie in a plastic pie container now and then.

Atkinson Reader Wins Subscription— Dear Frontier Woman: Many people at some time or other are confronted with the problem of what sort of gift would be acceptable to someone who is confined in a hospital for a lengthy period.

Perhaps the following list may be of some help. Of course, most of the items are for women but the saying, "It's a woman's world," seems to apply here, too.

Stationery, thank-you notes with stamps included. Crossword puzzles or word jumbles pasted on cardboard with the solution on the reverse side. A new bed jacket, a potted vine that doesn't need sun, a duster or robe.

A nightgown, a record player if allowed, dusting powder, a manicure kit, a bottle of skin freshener, cleansing tissues.

A makeup kit containing powder, lipstick and such. Small magazines, easily handled, perfume or cologne, a compact mirror, scrapbook in which to keep get-well cards, hand lotion or cream. Interesting book from the library, ball point pen and need we mention candy and flowers? ATKINSON READER.

All of these suggestions are good ones. I like to give special friends a gift a day sometimes. Buy inexpensive small gifts and wrap each separately marking one to be opened each day for a week, 10 days or two weeks. Buy inexpensive gifts that has something to look forward to each morning, in the form of a small gift. In these I have put hand lotion, stationery, stamps, postal cards, hankies, nice wash cloths or hand towels, cologne, a bar of good soap, powdered puffs, kitchen gadgets which may be used later and such things. Let your budget be your guide.

Explorer Munier Visits Knox in 1789

Starts Trade with Ponca Indians

Knox county in northeast Nebraska is one of the state's older counties and, in addition, is part of Nebraska known by white traders and explorers from an early date. The earliest visit on record dates from 1789 when Jean Baptiste Munier came up the Missouri river to the mouth of the Niobrara and struck up a trade with the Ponca Indians. Munier was followed by others and the years from 1789 down to the organization of Nebraska territory in 1854 saw a steady procession of traders, trappers, and others along the borders of what is now Knox county.

Probably the first white men who came to Knox county to stay—aside from the earlier Mormon settlers—were B. Y. Shelley and R. R. Corran, who located on land on the Niobrara on June 7, 1856. They were followed by others and by the spring of 1857 the territorial legislature was considering the problem of providing county government for the region.

On February 10 the county of L'eau-qui-court was established. Three days later the legislature incorporated the L'eau-qui-court company, consisting primarily of Shelley and Corran.

The company was given the authority to establish a town site and an exclusive right to keep ferries across the Missouri and Niobrara rivers in the region. The town to be developed by the company was to be known as Niobrara.

Niobrara developed rapidly under the direction of the L'eau-qui-court company and the company's officials had high hopes for building an impressive city at the junction of the Niobrara and the Missouri.

To illustrate how things were going, in 1857 the steamer "Omaha" arrived with material for a saw mill and a load of lumber. Three months later a three-story, $10,000 hotel had been built, supposedly the largest hotel in Nebraska at the time.

The depression of 1857 cut short the Niobrara boom and in 1859 the L'eau-qui-court company failed. Pioneers were nothing, however, if not able to make a new start, and in 1860 the Niobrara Town company was organized to carry on the building of a town.

In 1873 the legislature, as a result of a petition from 60 residents, changed the county's name from L'eau-qui-court to Knox, thus doing a favor to the spelling students of the county and at the same time honoring Gen. Henry Knox, Revolutionary war hero and secretary of war in the cabinet of President Washington.

The relationship to Washington's administration is appropriate because in 1789, the year Jean Munier visited the county, Washington was inaugurated as the first president of the United States.

Niobrara was by no means the only town in the county and other early settlements were Frankfort, Bazille Mills, Bloomfield, Crofton, Knoxville, Venus, Middlebranch and Verdigre. The present countyseat, Center, was not platted until 1901.

In 1880 Knox county had a population of 152. During the next decade it increased only to 261, but by 1880 it had jumped to 3,666. There was a steady increase in population until 1936 when a high of 19,110 was reached. Since that time there has been considerable decline and in 1950 the population was 14,820.

All Nebraska Drivers' Licenses Expire September 1

All Nebraska driver's licenses will expire September 1, and drivers will have 60 days to renew their licenses.

The fee for renewing the licenses will be $2. The operators' permits, which will be good for two years, may be obtained at the office or by mailing the required fee, along with your old license, to the Holt County Treasurer's office at O'Neill.

Drivers between the ages of 16 and 20 years who now have a license may obtain the two-year permit by calling at the office between September 1 and 17.

Effective September 18, a new state law requires 16 to 20-year-old drivers to obtain a probationary license, good only for one year. The fee for this license will be $1.50.

The requirement for the probationary license applies to both new and renewal licenses.

When mailing in for your renewal license, be sure to mention any change in weight or height. No change in birth date can be made without showing proof by birth certificates.

Be sure your old license is signed, before sending it in for renewal.
