Irrigation Chief Sees Basin Progress

The gross value of farm products produced in the North Platte valley in 1955 had an estimated value of $20,350,000, J. R. Walter, Jr., region 7 director of the bureau of reclamation in Denver, Colo., told the joint convention of the Nebraska Reclamation association and the Nebraska Irrigation association last Thursday in Scottsbluff.

Walter reported to the convention that there are now 1,393,000 acres of land irrigated in Nebraska.

He estimated that the 1955 total would reach 1,500,000.

"Production of crops from bureau of reclamation projects has been noteworthy," he said. "North Platte valley projects again had an excellent year. The late frost enabled crops to mature well."

In discussing future projects Walter said the bureau is looking ahead to development of projects on the Niobrara, Loup, North Loup, Platte and Republican rivers. The Ainsworth project is pretty well along, he reported.

"We hope the next session of congress will give us the full appropriation for the project."

Walter Says Niobrara Has High Priority

Around O'Neill, on the Niobrara river, studies started this fall for the irrigation of 66,000 acres. The O'Neill unit will be the largest single unit in Niobrara basin development, he said.

The Farwell unit on the Loup river has been approved by the bureau of reclamation this fall and involves 52,500 acres.

The North Loup investigations have proceeded slower but will advance as fast as possible covering 60,000 acres.

The Mid-State project on the Lower Platte river near Grand Island has proceeded well, he said.

The Republican river basin work is proceeding rapidly. The vote this week on the Red Willow-Hitchcock irrigation district involves 4,200 acres.

Stanley Miller, chief of the civil works branch of the Denver area office of the corps of engineers, reported: "Water is fast becoming one of our most valuable national resources. The corps of engineers has one of the most important roles in development of flood control."

"Because Nebraska has the greatest number of miles of flowing rivers the corps of engineers plays a more important role."

Current flood control problems involve the Niobrara, Republican and Platte river basins.

Miller said that the Niobrara does not have serious problems. The Republican problems will be solved by completion of the present program.

From the standpoint of water control the Platte valley is one of the most complex basins in the midwest and with the completion of additional works planned it will be one even more complex.

Col. Anthony J. Fleming of the Omaha army engineers' office told the group.

Colonel Fleming said this complexity is due to the numerous points at which water is diverted and returned to the stream in connection with existing irrigation and power developments.

He added that probably less attention is paid to flood control in the Platte than in any other basin of comparable size subject to heavy concentrated rain in the Missouri basin.

"It looks like the Platte's flood control problems have been neglected when we consider that its drainage area exceeds the com-
