Judge Town by Its People

By MRS. BLANCHE SPANN PEASE

Are you tired of the bone of the usual breakfast dishes? Want to try something different such as French cream sandwiches, fried? Well, here's how to do it.

FRENCH CREAM SANDWICHES

For the filling, combine a three-ounce package cream cheese and an eight-ounce can crushed pineapple. Mix until creamy. Use this filling to make four sandwiches. Cut each sandwich in half.

Combine one egg (beaten), 1/4 cup milk and a dash of salt. Dip each side of sandwiches into egg mixture and brown quickly on both sides in butter or margarine in skillet. Serve hot.

The team of "kraut and frankfurter" is very old and known for its deliciousness. These kraut and frankfurter foldups are a new version of an old combination. Recipe will make eight to 10 foldups.

KRAUT AND FRANKFURTER FOLDUPS

One No. 2 can kraut (drained), one tablespoon prepared mustard, two cups biscuit mix, one cup processed American cheese, 2/3 cup milk, eight to 10 frankfurters, one tablespoon milk, caraway seeds.

Combine kraut and mustard. Cook over low heat until thoroughly heated, stirring occasionally. Combine biscuit mix, cheese and milk, mix thoroughly. Roll out to 1/4 inch thickness on lightly floured surface. Cut into eight or 10 five-inch squares. Place a whole frankfurter diagonally on each biscuit square. Place 1/4 cup kraut mixture over center of each frankfurter. Overlap and seal two opposite corners of biscuit dough across top of kraut. Brush top of foldups with one tablespoon milk. Sprinkle with caraway seeds. Place on greased baking sheets. Bake in hot oven of 425 F. for 12 minutes, or until done. Serve piping hot.

Of course, the architecture is different around here. Most of the older houses are of brick and are lovely, large colonial houses, with hex signs on them. The signs are mostly of iron and star-shaped and were put on to keep the evil spirits away. Another thing that seems strange is that in the very oldest parts of town the front doors open out onto the sidewalk and the lawn being in the back yard. This is probably because these houses were built before the days of wide streets and sidewalks. I admit that driving on these streets seems a trifle hectic after being used to the wide open spaces of the Midwest.

Forgive me for writing such a long letter but I just wanted to share with you my enjoyment of the charm of the East but rest assured I remain loyal to the Midwest and always try to be a good press agent for the state of Nebraska.

which is one of the most beautiful rivers I have ever seen. It is wide and shallow, making it of no use for navigation but certainly makes it more scenic. Lewisburg lies within sight of the Appalachian mountains and the mountains seem to shelter the borough—as it is called instead of a town. The mayor is called a burgess, which seems very strange to a midwestern person who is used to the word mayor.

Some of the expressions people use around here are typically Pennsylvania Dutch. For instance, I have a neighbor who says, "I have to red up the house yet today" instead of pick up as we would say. When you stop to think about it, the words pick up sound strange, too, in reference to a house. She also says, "I went to the cookie jar but found they were all" whereas we would say "all gone." Their voice inflections are different, too. For instance, very often you will hear them asking a question and lowering their voice at the end, instead of raising it. I love to hear them talk and that is what I enjoy most about moving around—meeting different people with their different customs.
