'55 Pontiacs Go on Display Friday

Pontiac's two series, the luxurious Star Chief and the sleek, economical Chieftain, feature all new bodies and the new Strato-Streak 180 horsepower V-8 engine for 1955. They go on display Friday, October 29, at the Wm. Krotter Co. showrooms in O'Neill and Spencer.

Lower in overall height by almost three inches, the Star Chief and Chieftain have a low, road-hugging appearance. The rakish silhouette of the 1955 Pontiac results from the lower center of gravity designed into the car to safely utilize the full power of the new Strato-Streak V-8 engine.

The new panoramic windshield gives the driver almost a 180 degree sweep of uninterrupted vision. A 3.7 inch lower hood line is another safety feature immediately apparent in the design of 1955 Pontiac bodies.

The "Vogue" color lines available on the two-toned Star Chief and Chieftain models add to the fleet look of the 1955 Pontiacs. The upper color extends below the windows, breaking at the middle of lower body panel and sweeps back across the doors and fenders to the rear deck.

The new contours of the 1955 Pontiacs meet the eye from every angle. Starting where the hood meets the radiator grille and sweeping back to the windshield are Pontiac's famous twin silver streaks.

With the panoramic windshield and larger glass area of windows, the passenger compartment is surrounded by 26 percent more glass. The new wrap-around windshield alone contains 14 percent more forward vision for the driver.

A new ventilating system, with air intake across the cowl and at the base of the windshield, insures a constant supply of fume and dust free air to the passengers.

New chrome moldings and door-handle styling add to the streamline look of the body. A dip in the body line at the rear window increases the glass area and augments the sports car look of the two and four-door sedans, the convertible and Catalina coupe.
