Melton Is 'Superb' in Concert

Full-House Hears Famed Tenor Open 1954-'55 Season

By a Staff Writer

Twelve hundred persons who heard James Melton sing a two-hour concert Friday evening at the O'Neill public school auditorium ran out of superlatives before they could get into their automobiles and drive away. It was unanimously agreed the famous tenor of opera, concert, radio, television and screen is "as advertised."

Mr. Melton was the first attraction of a series booked for the 1954-'55 season by the newly-formed O'Neill Community Concerts association.

A late fortyish fellow with a six-foot two hundred pound frame, Mr. Melton took to the stage in strict formal attire and fashion. Beaming a warm, Irish smile, Mr. Melton proceeded to lean, physically, on the Steinway grand piano to brief his listeners on concerts in general and his concert in particular.

In this manner he took cognizance of the fact most people in the audience were concert-goers for the first time.

The chat-chat at the outset was disarming enough, but Mr. Melton carried things further. He struck from his standard program a heavy operatic air from "Euridice" and substituted "Ave Maria" from the Italian opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana." "This," he explained, "because I understand O'Neill is a devout little city."

His announcement of the change on the program brought immediate applause and from that moment on every applause meter would have registered a higher mark with each succeeding measure of appreciation.

Mr. Melton frequently digressed from his standard program and his encores largely consisted of folk music and semi-classics. He "threw in" about eight extra numbers for his enthusiastic, provincial crowd.

After intermission, his accompanist, Richard Hankinson, was accorded three times. The O'Neill association had arranged for the recently-purchased Steinway to be available for the Melton concert. So well did Mr. Hankinson please the crowd that Mr. Melton's first words after his belated return to the stage were an aside aimed at the piano player: "Show stealer!" he quipped.

The first portion of the program also included an air from "Comus," by Arne; "Stornelatrice" by Respighi; "Danza, Danza, Fanciulla Gentile" by Durante.

The second portion included "She Moved Through the Fair," an Irish folk song, arranged by Herbert Hughes; "Voices" by Hageman; "You Will Know My Love" by Skiles; "Ohie Meneche" by Giannini.

For part three — and immediately before the intermission — Mr. Melton sang perhaps the heaviest music of the program, an aria from "Tosca" by Puccini. It was at his juncture that Melton's true operatic greatness was revealed.

After intermission, for part four he sang three preludes from Opus 28 by Chopin and "Feux d'Artifice" by Debussy.

Part five consisted of "Mandoline" by Debussy; a score from "Le Roi d'Ys" by Lalo; "Beau Soir" by Debussy, and "El Vito," arranged by Oberauer.

Donald Mosel Is Making Comeback

RIVERSIDE — "In making my calls taking the 1954 farm census," writes Mrs. Carl Christon, The Frontier's Riverside correspondent, "I visited the Walter Mosel home. There I found their son, Donald, lying on his stomach making a brave comeback from burns received May 18."

"He suffered severe burns while burning tree stumps. He is a cheerful little fellow and I believe he could be made very happy to be remembered with a card shower on his 12th birthday anniversary, which falls on Sunday, November 14."

The Mosel address is Ew.eg.

Cards Whip Bartlett in Season Finale

Cannot score the first Cardinal through Coach Don Schneider added two, Donlin one, and Wanser came through once more. All scoring was done on the ground.

The Cardinals held the upper-hand throughout. Coach Don Templemeyer's crew finished the campaign with three wins and six losses. They registered three victories out of the final four starts.

O'Neill Bid Short; Atkinson Wins 6-0

ATKINSON—The O'Neill high Eagles got to the Atkinson high 1-foot line and time ran out last Thursday night. The Balers won 6-0. It was the closing game of the season for both clubs.

Atkinson's senior quarterback, Don Frickel, who had missed four of eight games because of a leg fracture, stole the show before a good-sized crowd. He called a brilliant game for his mates and carried the ball frequently for consistent yardage. Frickel also was outstanding on defense.

Frickel was shelved after the first game of the season. The Balers put away their togs with three wins, three losses and two ties.

Young Irish Priest Meets Kinfolk

A 26-year-old newly-ordained Catholic priest from the Galway district of Ireland stopped off in O'Neill over the weekend to visit kinfolk.

Rev. John Hynes, a St. Columban missionary who was ordained at Christmas time, 1953, at Navan, Ireland, is enroute with 20 other young Irish priests to posts in the Philippines, Japan and Korea. Father Hynes is a cousin of Matthew H. and Austin Hynes and M. M. Lanran, all of O'Neill. His father and the O'Neill men are first cousins.

"Matter of fact," the young priest explained, "the largest branch of the Hynes family, to which we all belong, is now here at O'Neill, and I am very happy to have the opportunity to meet them and be among them."

Father Hynes leaves behind his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Hynes; also one brother, Matthew, who is in the family farm; another brother, Austin, who is a policeman in County Cork; a younger brother who is in grammar school. One sister is married and resides on a farm and another sister married an Englishman and lives in England.

There are two sisters in the United States—both nuns. One is in New York City and the other at Tacoma, Wash.

The young priest's home locality is about six miles west of Ballinsloe, which is a town of about seven thousand persons located a few miles east of the head of Galway Bay. Ballinsloe is noted for its big county fair. He finished his grammar school training and entered a Columban's seminary, where he spent seven years in preparation for the priesthood.

Father Hynes speaks good English with a touch of the Gaelic influence. In western Galway county, he explains, Gaelic is spoken extensively. In Ireland it is compulsory to teach Gaelic in the schools.

The contingent of 21 priests was loaded at New York City to see the sights and to establish contacts with kinfolks. Father Hynes stopped off at the St. Columban house at Bellevue, outside Omaha, which is the U.S. headquarters for the missionary order. Seven of the young priests, including Father Hynes, will be stationed in the Philippines, seven go to Korea and seven go to Japan. All 21 will reunite in San Francisco, Calif., on November 17.

to prepare to sail the following day.

Father Hynes officiated at the 9 o'clock mass Sunday at St. Patrick's Catholic church and spoke informally to the parishioners. He was entertained at breakfast at St. Patrick's rectory by Very Rev. Timothy O'Sullivan (himself a native of Ireland) and Rev. Thomas Hitch, assistant pastor.

A family dinner was served at noon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Hynes.

The youthful padre brought along several phonograph records which had been recorded by some of his friends in the old country. They were RCA Victor (Dublin) recordings of authentic reels and jigs. Playing them touched off merriment in the household. Thanks to the marvel of electronics, Father Hynes is taking his Philippine outpost these records as mementoes of the fatherland.

Father Hynes said Ireland has emerged into quite a prosperous little country now that the people have put away the stormy feuds and there have been no famines or depressions in recent years.

"The years 1932 to 1938 were among the hardest our country ever knew," he explains, "but things are quite good now." Father Hynes is impressed by here.

the "bigness and vastness of America" and was anxiously looking forward to a daylight train ride through the Rocky mountains from Denver, Colo. Highest point in Ireland, he said, is about three thousand feet above sea level, and none of the mountains have any rugged peaks.

Junior High 'Voters' Choose Like Parents

INMAN—Do school children follow in their parents' footsteps when it comes to voting?

On Tuesday, November 2, while the adults in the land were deciding who they wanted in the government offices, the students of the Inman junior high school also voted.

The majority of votes, both Inman school and township, were for republicans. The exception to this rule was the vote given Democratic Candidate Leo Tomjack for sheriff. He received 95 percent of the votes at school and 87 percent of the votes of the township.

Parental influence on voting was lacking in the case of U.S. senator. Democratic Candidate James Green received 52 percent of the votes of the school and his opponent, Roman Hruska, received 62 percent of the votes for the township.

It can be seen from this analysis the Inman children usually follow in their parents footsteps except in the case of U.S. Senator.

6 Holt Youths Are Army Volunteers

Six Holt county youths volunteered Tuesday, November 9, for military induction through the Holt county selective service office.
