Free-Throw Rules Are Juggled Again

There is one major rule change in basketball that spectators will be witnessing this year. The number of free throws again has been juggled. This year the rule states, "Second (bonus) free throw if the first free throw for a common personal foul which occurs prior to the last three minutes is successful."

This means that during the first 29 minutes of a ball game, if a boy makes his first free shot, on all one-shot fouls, he is awarded another shot as a bonus. If he misses his first shot, the ball is in play.

Last year the boy was given a second shot if the first was unsuccessful, thus rewarding sloppy play. This year the rule was revised to reward accuracy and eliminate fouling. All two-shot fouls will still be treated as in years past. Also all fouls in the last three minutes will still be two-shot fouls. There are other minor changes in the wording of different rules, but the rule is basically the same.

One rule has never been changed: That is to play the game squarely and yell for the home team.
