

E. J. Revell's Story Starts in Orphanage

stocking and terms the grass left at the end of the grazing season as "money in the bank."

Mr. Revell was on the original board of supervisors for the Holt district, is a member of the Holt County Aberdeen-Angus association, and has taken an active part in many community affairs.

His early life was spectacular. An orphan at an early age, he was separated from his oldest brother. The three younger brothers—of whom he was the second ranking—remained at the orphanage in Omaha until it burned. Then they were transferred to a county home and soon taken for adoption. He says the sole purpose of the family who adopted them was to make them work.

He remembers that upon their arrival at the new home the "old man" said of his youngest brother:

"Mrs. —, what did you bring that little boy for? He can't do no work!"

As a result, the brothers were split up again, the youngest brother was "given away" to an old maid school teacher. However, recalling the incident, Mr. Revell says that he was the only one who ever got a "decent education." (Later, Mr. Revell was reunited with all of his brothers.)

As soon as he and his older brother were able they ran away from their foster home. On the first attempt they were unsuccessful. He says they were driven home by their foster father on horseback, using a buggy whip, driving them like cattle. Before long, he says, they were able to slip away and for their first job they received a salary of $50 a year plus board and clothes.

He then went to Iowa for a short time and worked for $20 a month. In his early teens, he and his brother came to the O'Neill area and lived with the W. J. Gray family south of town. He declares this was the first real home he had ever known and he has many fond memories of the times he had with "Uncle Will" and "Aunt Maggie," as they were known.

During that time he attended Fremont normal for 10 weeks, the only formal education he ever had.

He spent about five years in a sheep camp in Wyoming and then returned to O'Neill. In 1907, he married Miss Pearl Coffman and started farming northwest of O'Neill. In 1915, they moved to one quarter section (now the M. E. Davis residence). He says there is still lots of conservation that he would like to do and will do as time goes on.

The SCD supervisors are pleased that in winning the Goodyear award it has been made possible for Mr. Revell to have an all-expense trip to the Goodyear farms at Litchfield Park, Ariz. He will be accompanied by Elmer Juracek.
