State Capitol News

Anderson Reappoints Ress, Others

LINCOLN—With Gov. Victor Anderson's inauguration scheduled this week, the shape of his administration began to take shape.

From his appointments could be seen the trend of his personnel. From his pronouncements came some of the philosophy he hopes to carry out in state government.

The fact that Anderson reappointed almost every one of the office holders who had served under Gov. Robert Crosby demonstrated that the changeover in republican administrations is going to be relatively smooth.

Anderson changed tax commissioners, a board of control member, capitol custodian, and the purchasing department setup. As was expected, he brought in his own administrative assistant.

But he announced he would hold up a decision about the state budget supervisor's job until he got some thinking from legislature on whether this is an important enough job to keep.

Named as the new tax commissioner is Fred Herrington of Lincoln. He will replace George W. Peterson, who had served since November, 1953. Herrington is head of a real estate scientific tax appraisal firm and formerly was with the E. T. Wilkins firm, which did reappraisals for several Nebraska counties. He also worked with tax officials in the current tax reform program and is generally highly regarded.

The new member of the board of control was to be named. He will replace William Diers of Gresham, presently chairman of the state board of control. Joseph Bovey of Lincoln was named as capitol custodian, replacing John Knickrehm of Grand Island. Bovey also will serve as an administrative assistant in Governor Anderson's office.

New Policies— On his purchasing department appointment Governor Anderson took an initial step in what he hopes will be a direction toward more efficient purchasing. He named Carl Rosenlof not only to head the state purchasing department but also to continue to be in charge of purchasing for the board of control, the job he has held in the past.

The move left State Purchasing Agent Blaine Yoder out in the cold. Anderson said he hopes that the University of Nebraska eventually can be brought into the purchasing setup. In fact, the governor said, he would like to see the day when there is one central purchasing agency through which all purchases must be made.

The other appointment made by Anderson was a temporary one. He named his campaign advisor, A. C. Eichberg, as his administrative assistant for a few months. Eichberg was a longtime businessman in Lincoln but went to Texas 11 years ago because of his wife's health. He is in the citrus fruit export business there and also runs a peach orchard in Arkansas.

There is every indication that Anderson plans to lean heavily on Eichberg for advice. Eichberg has a reputation all his life of quietly working behind the scenes for worthwhile Lincoln community projects.

Reappointments— Among the officials reappointed were State Engineer J. R. Ress, State Banking Director James McLain, State Insurance Director Thomas Pansing, State Labor Commissioner James Weasmer, State Liquor Commissioner Nathan Pont and State Agriculture Director Ed Hoyt.

There had been rumors about each of these at one time or another, speculating that they would not be reappointed.

Administration Outlook— The purchasing agent change was symptomatic of what Anderson has called the "businesslike" government he would like to have. He has also promised to work hard on the budget, "cutting out unnecessary waste."

But close observers feel that Anderson will not have a "pen-punching" administration. He has already said more money will have to be spent in the mental health program. He has announced he hopes to get higher salaries for key state officials.

The new governor said he intends to define the responsibilities of his department heads and then give them full control over their departments.

If he has a disagreement with an agency—such as the state advisory highway commission—he plans to "go into a room behind closed doors and not come out until we have agreement." He told the commission that was his intention when disputes arise.

The governor has also indicated he plans to stick with the sufficiency rating system by which the priority of highway improvement is determined. But he has said he would like to have some way that people who disagreed with the rating of a particular stretch of road could "appeal."

by the legislature and Governor Anderson was the thorny question of who should have final authority in determining state highway relocations.

Governor Anderson said he would like to get the legislature's thinking.

Up to now the state engineer has had the final say-so. The state advisory highway commission thinks it should have that right. The commission is holding up decisions on five relocation questions referred to it. These are U.S. 30 at North Platte, state 35 between Wakefield and Emerson, state 12 between Crofton and Maxwell, U.S. 281 in the Spencer area, and the so-called outer beltline highway in Omaha.
