'SAC' Preview

There's a great new picture soon to be released by Paramount. We sat in Friday night on an invitational preview showing of "Strategic Air Command" at Omaha's Orpheum theater. And Omaha, as everybody knows, is home base and nerve center for the U.S.'s A- and H-bomb striking arm.

Friend wife and I have an added interest in the forthcoming film because, during World War II, we both knew James Stewart, the actor who has the lead role in "Strategic Air Command."

Background for the film we learned from Bernie Lay, jr., co-author of the screen play.

"It's Jim's . . . all his. Oh, I guess he talked it over with General LeMay; then gave the signal to Valentine Davies and myself and we went to work. This was a year and a half ago."

Bomber Pilot

James Stewart entered World War II as an army air force pilot (he had to get a waiver because he was over-age). He finished pilot training, was assigned a B-24 heavy bomber crew. Folk around here recall when he stopped off at Sioux City and Lincoln air bases to complete training for overseas.

Arriving in the European theater about midway in the war against Germany and Italy, the lanky actor and his crew were assigned to a group in England, bombardment wing in England.

James Stewart fought a tough war and he tried earnestly and hard to remain anonymous. Every American and British war correspondent (there were hundreds of them) tried to get at the Indiana, Pa., chap but he wouldn't give them a tumble. He stayed home course with the business at hand—fighting the war.

His well-earned promotions came at regular intervals (like many other young air command-ers).

Jim took the bombing missions in turn and frequently he would command vast armadas flying over Fortress Europe.

Somewhere along the line I became aide-de-camp to General Edward ("Ted") Timberlake. Jim, meanwhile, became a colonel and chief-of-staff for the General. We occupied the same quarters for about a year, living and working together under the same roof.

James Stewart did a great job—flying, commanding, fighting, administering.

No Mistakes

I can vouch for the administrative records because I wrote 'em as part of my dull surface duties. It can be said James Stewart never made a mistake—at least, if he did they never turned up in the interrogations and summaries.

Everybody recognizes his marked ability as an actor (he's a graduate of Princeton and the chaqueta circuit).

How then could there be anyone in the world more entitled to play this lead role or more eminently qualified than James Stewart?

The "Strategic Air Command" film story opens in a Florida training camp for the St. Louis Cardinals. Stewart, a WWII air force veteran, is a high-priced member of the pitching staff. He is recalled as a reservist, resents the idea of giving up his baseball career. His wife (June Allyson) likewise takes a dim view, but they make the most of it. Frank Lovejoy plays the role of General LeMay, the hard-as-nails cigar-chomping chief at SAC.

Stewart has close shaves getting checked out in B-36 and B-47 jet bombers, but experienced and capable flyers like Stewart are needed to direct the influx of young airmen.

William Daniels accomplished some amazing and breath-taking aerial photography, shooting in Technicolor and VistaVision. The preview audience occasionally would applaud the photography in the middle of the picture.

Great Service

Finally, after rounding out his 21 months as a reservist, Stewart is confronted with the choice of staying in and helping his country during the cold war or getting back to his baseball career.

Wives of servicemen (even aircraft commanders) have no snap. Housing leaves something to be desired. "Strategic Air Command" is an emotional and articulate pitch for more pay and better living conditions for SAC air and ground crews. James Stewart and Paramount deftly get the story across and we feel they are doing their country an invaluable service with this presentation. The film also gives SAC personnel a wonderful morale shot in the arm.

James Stewart's flying will have you on the edge of your seat. It's a military air story, yet not a war picture. It's homey and entertaining and you'll get the impression our strategic air arm is in good hands.

Omaha Reunion

Mrs. Georgia Rasley, manager of the Royal theater, expects to show the SAC film this summer. The premiere is scheduled next month in New York City.

At a reception and banquet at the Fontenelle, preceding the preview, my wife and I had a reunion with the free-lancing, incredibly successful actor. He's added a couple of pounds, quite grey. We talked about our kids and two or three of the quonset-hut characters we lived and worked with 11 years ago.

One of Jim's twin daughters is named Kelly. We suggested Kelly come and get acquainted with O'Neill. He smiled, thought it a good Irish idea.

Kemper, Stevens Chosen Athletic Royalty at Page

PAGE—On Thursday evening, March 24, the Page High Eagles attended the athletic banquet given in their honor by the Pep club and its sponsor, Mrs. Anna Carter.

An Eagle theme was carried out in the decorations. Gold and black streamers covered the walls as a base and Page Eagles and Pep club covered the streamers. Overhead was a sky of blue streamers and silver stars. Megaphones and basketballs were used as placecards; yellow tapers and black and gold nut baskets were also used.

The meal was prepared by the mothers of the pep club girls. A program followed the banquet with Helen Finch, president of the Pep club, as toastmaster. On the program were Gary Kemper, Supt. Ralph Brostrom, Eddie Walker, Coach Glen Blezek, Carl Max, Marian Heiss. Mr. Max was the guest speaker.

After the program, there was a reading by Kathleen Walker and a duet, "Let the Sunshine In," by Faye Rutherford and Leona Summers.

There were about 75 in attendance. The students enjoyed dancing till 11 o'clock in the gymnasium.

Wanda Stevens and Gary Kemper were crowned as king and queen of sports for 1955.
