Irrigation Poses Problems

Irrigation of land such as this (above) presents many prob- lems and cannot be done satisfactorily. Some of the land receives too much water and other parts get too little. The long runs and steep grade also cause erosion, which is noticeable in the foreground of the picture. For the conservation of both soil and water, such land needs leveling and the design of an irrigation system that will keep the water under control.—Photo by Soil Conservation Service.

Now at Camp Polk
